

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

DA
315
F942
1858
V.6

HISTORY OF ENGLAND

FROM THE FALL OF WOLSEY TO THE DEATH OF ELIZABETH.

VOLUME VI.

HISTORY OF ENGLAND.

FROM

THE FALL OF WOLSEY

TO

THE DEATH OF ELIZABETH.

BY

JAMES ANTHONY FROUDE, M.A.

LATE FELLOW OF EXETER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

VOLUME VI.

LONDON:

JOHN W. PARKER AND SON, WEST STRAND.

1860.

[The right of translation is reserved to the author.]

LONDON :
SAVILL AND EDWARDS, PRINTERS, CHANDOS STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

CONTENTS OF VOLUME VI.

CHAPTER XXX.

QUEEN JANE AND QUEEN MARY.

	PAGE
Flight of Mary	2
Advice of the Flemish Ambassadors	3
Position of Northumberland	5
Lady Jane Grey	6
Proclamation of Queen Jane	11
Letter of Mary to the Lords	13
Guilford Dudley and the Crown	16
Mary's Party gains Strength... ..	18
Northumberland levies Troops	19
Lord Pembroke	23
The Council prepare to declare for Mary	24
Revolt of the Fleet and Army	25
Sunday during the Crisis	26
Northumberland invites a French Invasion	29
The Meeting at Baynard's Castle	30
Proclamation of Mary in London	33
Arrest of Northumberland	36
The Emperor and the Queen's Marriage	38
Funeral of Edward VI.	42
The Emperor's Advice	43
Gardiner returns to the Council	46
The Ambassador Renard... ..	48
Mary enters London	50
Advice of Renard	51
Restoration of the deprived Bishops	53
Reduction of Expenditure	54

	PAGE
The Hot Gospeller	56
Mass at the Tower	58
Disputes in Council... ..	60
Sermon at Paul's Cross	61
The Marriage Question	62
Northumberland's Trial	64
Northumberland under Sentence	68
The Recantation	69
The Executions	70
The Reaction	75
The Purging of Convocation	78
Arrest of Latimer	79
Arrest of Cranmer	80
General Restoration of the Mass	82
Reginald Pole	84
England and the Papacy... ..	86
Visit of Commendone to the Queen	87
Difficulties in Restoring the Papal Authority	90
The Prince of Spain proposed as the Queen's Husband	91
Parties in England	92
Elizabeth and the Mass	95
Lord Courtenay and the Queen	97
The Coronation Oath	98
The Coronation	101
The Spanish Marriage	102
The Queen and Renard	104
Philip's Virtues	105
Reginald Pole	106
Meeting of Parliament	109
Preliminary Discussion	111
The Queen's Legitimacy and the Authority of the Pope	112
Convocation	114
Debate on the Real Presence	115
The Spanish Marriage	117
Mary's Prayer... ..	118
Views of Gardiner and Paget	119

Contents.

vii

	PAGE
Impending Fate of Cranmer	122
Petition of the House of Commons	123
The Queen and Council	125
The Succession	126
Menace of Rebellion	127
The Queen and Elizabeth	129

CHAPTER XXXI.

THE SPANISH MARRIAGE.

Conflicting Parties	131
Advice of Pole	133
The Marriage Articles	135
Opposition of the People	138
Arrival of Count Egmont	140
The Marriage Treaty	141
Alarm of France	142
Conspiracies	143
Plans for a General Insurrection	144
Commencement of Disturbance	145
Flight of Sir Peter Carew	148
Conference at Allingham Castle	149
Rising in Kent	150
The Duke of Suffolk	152
Sir Thomas Wyatt	153
Intercepted Despatches of the French Ambassador	156
The Queen's Troops join Wyatt	158
Storming of Cowling Castle	159
Alarm at the Court	160
The Queen at the Guildhall	163
Ill Success of Suffolk in the Midland Counties ...	165
State of Coventry	167
Suffolk is taken	169
Wyatt at Southwark	170

	PAGE
Agitation of the Council	171
Wyatt crosses the Thames	174
The Night at Whitehall	175
Advance of Wyatt	177
The Insurrection fails	180
The Queen's Revenge	181
Lady Jane Grey the first Victim	183
General Havoc among the Prisoners	188
Arrest of Elizabeth	190
Parties in the Council	192
The Proxy Marriage	193
Gardiner and the intended Persecution	196
Creation of Catholic Peers	198
The Refugees in France	199
Perils of Elizabeth	203
Sentence of Wyatt	204
Elizabeth writes to the Queen	206
The Tower	209
Protest of the Lords	211
Renard and the Queen	212
Meeting of Parliament	213
The Marriage Bill	214
Execution of Wyatt	216
Trial and Acquittal of Throgmorton	218
The Succession	219
The Persecution Bills	220
Resistance of the Lay Lords	221
The Bills are lost	224
The Court and Lord Howard of Effingham	225
Elizabeth is sent to Woodstock	226
The Queen's Troubles	228
Philip sails from Spain	231
Philip at Southampton	233
The Wet Ride to Winchester	237
The Marriage	238
War in Belgium	239
Charles V. at Namur	241

CHAPTER XXXII.

RECONCILIATION WITH ROME.

	PAGE
Pole and the Emperor	244
The Church Lands... ..	247
The Papal Commission	248
Objections to Pole's Return	250
Pole appeals to Philip	251
The Spaniards in London	254
Philip is weary of England	256
Bonner's Articles	257
Agitation in the City	258
A New Parliament	260
The Elections	261
The Roman Question	262
An Embassy is sent to Pole	265
Pole's Return	268
The Journey	269
Pole at Canterbury	271
The Salutation... ..	273
The Queen enceinte	274
Speech of Pole at Whitehall	276
Parliament petitions for Absolution	282
St. Andrew's Day	283
Absolution and Reconciliation of England	287
Pole writes to the Pope	289
Catholic Exultation... ..	291
Petition of the Clergy	292
The Act of Reconciliation	294
The Passing of the Heresy Acts	295
Impenitence of Parliament, and Discontent of Pole	297
The Act of Reconciliation	299
Regency Bill	307
Dissolution of Parliament	309
The Limits of the Catholic Reaction	310
The Legate's Injunctions	313

	PAGE
Commencement of the Persecution	314
Trials of Hooper and Rogers	315
Rogers is burnt at Smithfield... ..	318
Hooper is sent to Gloucester	319
Martyrdom of Hooper	323
Effect upon the People	326
Conspiracy and Failure	328
Renard's Advice to Philip	329

CHAPTER XXXIII.

THE MARTYRS.

The Persecution continues	334
Burning of William Hunter	336
Ferrars, Bishop of St. David's	338
The Crimes of Ferrars	339
Ferrars is burnt	341
Prospects of European Peace	343
Proposed Conference	344
The Queen's expected Confinement	346
Litanies and Processions... ..	347
The Child is not born	348
Condition of the Queen	350
Fresh Stimulus to the Persecution... ..	351
Burning of Cardmaker and Warne	353
The Child is not born	354
Change in the Queen's Prospects	355
Release of Elizabeth	356
Interview between the Sisters	358
Intended Abdication of the Emperor	361
Philip leaves England	363
Views of the Spaniards	365
Philip on the Continent... ..	368
The Persecution	370

Contents.

xi

	PAGE
✓ Trial of Cranmer at Oxford	372
✓ Trials of Ridley and Latimer	379
Ridley and Latimer are burnt	385
Effects of the Persecution	391
Paul IV. and the Church Lands	392
Death and Character of Gardiner	394
Meeting of Parliament	396
The Subsidy and the First-fruits	397
First-fruits cannot be restored to the Pope	398
Irritation of the Queen	400
Further Failures and Dissolution	401
Correspondence of Mary with Philip	403
Fate of Cranmer referred to the Pope	404
Sentence arrives from Rome	406
The Archbishop is condemned	408
Pole writes to him	409
He wavers and recants	414
The Court, nevertheless, will kill him	418
Cranmer at St. Mary's Church	419
The Sermon	420
The Archbishop's last Speech	422
His Penitence	427
His Death	429

CHAPTER XXXIV.

CALAIS.

The Dudley Conspiracy	431
The Party at Arundel's	435
Intrigues with France	439
Arrest of the Conspirators	442
Confessions of the Prisoners	443
The Torture	444
Execution... ..	445
The Queen and the People	446

	PAGE
The Persecutions	447
Another Conspiracy	449
The Queen and the Lords	450
Reasons against Interference	451
The Refugees	452
War with the Papacy	456
Designs of France on Calais	458
Plot to betray Calais to the French	459
Bad Harvest and Famine	461
The Legate's Admonition to the London Citizens	462
New Commission for the Persecution	465
Bucer and Fagius	467
Catherine Cathie	468
The Protestants under Persecution... ..	470
Philip comes to England	473
Attempt of Sir Thomas Stafford at Scarborough ...	475
War with France	476
Paul IV. cancels Pole's Commission	477
Protests of the Queen and Council... ..	478
Peto appointed Legate	480
Pole accused of Heresy	481
St. Quentin	482
Submission of Paul to Alva	484
A forced Loan in England	486
Calling of Parliament	487
State of Calais	488
Inadequate Defences	490
Destruction of Bushing by Lord Grey	493
Guise threatens Calais	494
The Queen neglects to send Reinforcements... ..	495
Siege of Calais... ..	496
Loss of the Rysbank	498
Paralysis of the Government	499
Calais is taken	501
Wreck of the English Transports	502
The Queen's Despondency	503
Siege of Guisnes	504
The English are expelled from France	506

CHAPTER XXXV.

DEATH OF MARY.

	PAGE
Parliament votes a Subsidy	509
The National Defences	511
Money borrowed in Flanders	513
General Despondency	514
Pestilence... ..	515
The Martyrs	516
Battle of Gravelines	518
Prospects of Peace	520
The Conference at Cercamp	522
The Calais Difficulty	523
The Queen's last Illness	524
Mission of Count de Feria	525
Death of Mary and Pole... ..	527
Character of Mary	528
Results of the Reign	529
The Persecution, its Causes and its Effects	530

ERRATA—VOL. VI

- Page 60, line 7, for 'retire,' read 'return.'
- „ 133, line 23, for 'legacy,' read 'legation.'
- „ 253, line 18, for 'wardens,' read 'warders.'
- „ 254, line 17, for 'to meet,' read 'to be met.'

CHAPTER XXX.

QUEEN JANE AND QUEEN MARY.

THE death of Edward VI. was ushered in with CH. 30.
signs and wonders, as if heaven and earth
were in labour with revolution. The hail lay upon the grass in the London gardens as red as blood. At Middleton Stony in Oxfordshire, anxious lips reported that a child had been born
with one body, two heads, four feet and hands.*

A.D. 1553.
July 7.
Signs in earth and signs in heaven before the death of Edward.

About the time when the letters patent were signed there came a storm such as no living Englishman remembered. The summer evening grew black as night. Cataracts of water flooded the houses in the city and turned the streets into rivers ; trees were torn up by the roots and whirled through the air, and a more awful omen
—the forked lightning—struck down the steeple
of the church where the heretic service had been read for the first time.†

The king died a little before nine o'clock on Thursday evening. His death was made a

* Grey Friars' Chronicle :
MACHYN.

† BAOARDO'S History of the Revolution in England on the Death of Edward VI., printed at Venice, 1558. A copy of this rare book is in the Bodleian Library at Oxford.

CH. 30.
 A.D. 1553.
 July 7.
 A courier carries the news to Mary,

secret ; but in the same hour a courier was galloping through the twilight to Hunsdon to bid Mary mount and fly. Her plans had been for some days prepared. She had been directed to remain quiet, but to hold herself ready to be up and away at a moment's warning. The lords who were to close her in would not be at their posts, and for a few hours the roads would be open. The Howards were looking for her in Norfolk; and thither she was to ride at her best speed, proclaiming her accession as she went along, and sending out her letters calling loyal Englishmen to rise in her defence.

Who
 escapes into Norfolk.

So Mary's secret friends had instructed her to act, as her one chance. Mary, who, like all the Tudors, was most herself in the moments of greatest danger, followed a counsel boldly which agreed with her own opinion; and when Lord Robert Dudley came in the morning with a company of horse to look for her, she was far away. Relays of horses along the road, and such other precautions as could be taken without exciting suspicion, had doubtless not been overlooked.

Arrival and advice of Renard,
 ambassador from
 Charles V.

Far different advice had been sent to her by the new ambassadors of the Emperor. Scheyfne, who understood England and English habits, and who was sanguine of her success, had agreed to a course which had probably been arranged in concert with him; but on the 6th, the day of Edward's death, Renard and M. de Courieres, arrived from Brussels. To Renard, accustomed to countries where governments were everything and people nothing, for a single woman to proclaim herself queen in the face of those who had the armed force of the kingdom in their hands, appeared like madness. Little confidence could be placed in her supposed friends, since they had wanted resolution to refuse their signatures to the instrument of her deposition. The Emperor could not move; although he might wish well to her cause, the alliance of England was of more importance to him, and he would not compromise himself with the faction whose success, notwithstanding Scheyfne's assurance, he looked upon as certain. Renard, therefore, lost not a moment in entreating the princess not to venture upon a course from which he anticipated inevitable ruin. If the nobility or the people desired to have her for queen, they would make her queen. There was no need for her to stir.*

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
July 7.

* Avant nostre arrivée elle mist en delibération avec aulungs de ses plus confidens ce qu'elle debvroit faire, advenant la dicte morte; la quelle treuva, que incontinent la dicte morte decouverte, elle se debvoit publier royne par lettres et escriptz, et qu'en ce faisant, elle conciteroit plusieurs à se déclarer pour la maintenir telle, (et aussey que y a quelque observance par de çà que celui ou celle qui est appelé à la couronne se doit incontinent tel déclarer et publier) pour la haine qu'ilz portent audict duc, le tenant tiran et indigne. S'estant absolument resoluë qu'elle debvoit suyvre ceste conclusion et conseil, autrement elle tom-beroit en danger de sa personne plus grand qu'elle n'est et perdroit l'esper de parvenir à la couronne. La quelle conclusion avons treuvé estrange, difficile, et dangereuse, pour les raisons soubzscriptes: pour aultant que toutes les forces du pays sont es mains dudict duc: que la dicte dame n'a espoir de contraires forces ny d'assistance pour donner pied à ceulx qu'ilz adhérer luy voudroient; que se publiant royne, le roy et royne désignés par le dict testament (encores qu'il soit mal) prendroient fondement, de l'invahir par la force et que n'y aura moien d'y résister si vostre majesté ne s'en empesche; ce que avons pesé pour CH. 30. The remonstrance agreed fully with the opinion of Charles himself, who replied to Renard's account of his conduct with complete approval of it.*

A.D. 1553.
July 7.

The Emperor, afraid that Mary would fail, is afraid to compromise himself or her.

The Emperor's power was no longer equal to an attitude of menace; he had been taught, by the repeated blunders of Reginald Pole, to distrust accounts of popular English sentiment; and he disbelieved entirely in the ability of Mary and her friends to cope with a conspiracy so broadly contrived, and supported by the countenance of France.† But Mary was probably gone from Hunsdon before advice arrived, to which she had been lost if she had listened. She had ridden night and day without a halt for a les grands affaires et empeschemens qu'elle a contre les François et en divers lieux, que ne semble convenir que l'on concite en ceste saison les Angloys contre vostre Majesté et ses pays.

Comme n'avons peu communiquer verbalement avec elle, l'avons advertie desdicts difficultés. . . . Que si la noblesse ses adhérens, ou le peuple la desiroit et maintenoit pour royne, il le pourroit démonstrer par l'effect; que la question estoit grande même entre barbares et gens de telle condition que les Angloys. . . . Luy touchant ces difficultez pour le respect de sa personne et pour suyvre la fin de la dicte instruction qu'est de non troubler le royaume au désavantage de vostre Majesté.—The Ambassadors in England to the Emperor: Papiers d'Etat du Cardinal de Granvelle, vol. iv. pp. 19, 20.

* Nous avons veu par vos lectres l'advertissement qu'avez donné soubz main à Madame la princesse nostre cousine, affin qu'elle ne se laisse for-compter par ceulx qui luy persuadent qu'elle se haste de se déclarer pour royne, que nous a semblé tres bien pour les raisons et considerations touschez en vosdictes lectres.—The Emperor to the Ambassadors: Ibid. pp. 24, 25.

† Ne se pouvoient faire grand fondement sur la faveur et affection que aucuns particuliers et le peuple peuvent porter à nostredicta cousine, ne fust que y en y eust plus grant nombre ou des principaulx, n'estant cela souffisant pour contreminer la negociation si fondée et de si longue main que le dict duc de Northumberland a emprisé avec l'assistance que doubtez de France.—Ibid. pp. 25, 26.

hundred miles to Keninghal, a castle of the Howards on the Waveney river. There, in safe hands, she would try the effect of an appeal to her country. If the nation was mute, she would then escape to the Low Countries.*

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.

July 8.

Mary appeals to the country.

In London, during Friday and Saturday, the death of Edward was known and unknown. Every one talked of it as certain. Yet the duke still spoke of him as living, and public business was carried on in his name. On the 8th the mayor and aldermen were sent for to Greenwich to sign the letters patent. From them the truth could not be concealed, but they were sworn to secrecy before they were allowed to leave the palace. The conspirators desired to have Mary under safe custody in the Tower before the mystery was made known to the world, and another difficulty was not yet got over.

Northumberland, being still in difficulties, conceals Edward's death.

The novelty of a female sovereign, and the supposed constitutional objection to it, were points in favour of the alteration which Northumberland was unwilling to relinquish. The 'device' had been changed in favour of Lady Jane; but Lady Jane was not to reign alone: Northumberland intended to hold the rein tight-grasped in his own hands, to keep the power in his own family, and to urge the sex of Mary as among the prominent occasions of her incapacity.†

* BAOARDO.

† In the explanation given on the following Tuesday to the Emperor's ambassadors, Madame Marie was said — 'Nestre capable dudict royaume pour le divorce faict entre le feu Roy Henry et la Royne Katherine; se référant aux causes aians men ledict divorce; et mesme n'estre suffisante pour l'administration d'icelluy comme estant femme,

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.

July.

Guilford Dudley to be king.Character,
age, and accom-plishments
of Lady

Jane Grey.

England was still to have a king, and that king was to be Guilford Dudley.

Jane Grey, eldest daughter of the Duke of Suffolk, was nearly of the same age with Edward. Edward had been precocious to a disease; the activity of his mind had been a symptom, or a cause, of the weakness of his body. Jane Grey's accomplishments were as extensive as Edward's; she had acquired a degree of learning rare in matured men, which she could use gracefully, and could permit to be seen by others without vanity or consciousness. Her character had developed with her talents. At fifteen she was learning Hebrew and could write Greek; at sixteen she corresponded with Bullinger in Latin at least equal to his own; but the matter of her letters is more striking than the language, and speaks more for her than the most elaborate panegyrics of admiring courtiers. She has left a portrait of herself drawn by her own hand; a portrait of piety, purity, and free, noble innocence, uncoloured, even to a fault, with the emotional weaknesses of humanity.* While the effects of the Reformation in England had been chiefly visible in the outward dominion of scoundrels and in the eclipse of the hereditary virtues et pour la religion.—Papiers d'Etat du Cardinal de Granvelle, p. 28. Noailles was instructed to inform the King of France of the good affection of 'the new king' ('le nouveaulx Roy). He had notice of the approaching coronation of 'the king;' and in the first communication of Edward's death to Hoby and Morryson in the Netherlands, a 'king,' and not a 'queen,' was described as on the throne in his place.

* Letters of Lady Jane Grey to Bullinger: Epistolæ Tigurinae, pp. 3—7.

of the national character, Lady Jane Grey had lived to show that the defect was not in the Reformed faith, but in the absence of all faith, —that the graces of a St. Elizabeth could be rivalled by the pupil of Cranmer and Ridley. The Catholic saint had no excellence of which Jane Grey was without the promise; the distinction was in the freedom of the Protestant from the hysterical ambition for an unearthly nature, and in the presence, through a more intelligent creed, of a vigorous and practical understanding.

Chr. 30.

A.D. 1553.
July.

When married to Guilford Dudley, Lady Jane had entreated that, being herself so young, and her husband scarcely older, she might continue to reside with her mother.* Lady Northumberland had consented; and the new-made bride remained at home till a rumour went abroad that Edward was on the point of death, when she was told that she must remove to her father-in-law's house, till 'God should call the king to his mercy;' her presence would then be required at the Tower, the king having appointed her to be the heir to the crown.

After her marriage she resides at home till the approach of Edward's death.

This was the first hint which she had received of the fortune which was in store for her. She believed it to be a jest, and took no notice of the order to change her residence, till the Duchess of Northumberland came herself to fetch her. A violent scene ensued with Lady Suffolk. At last the duchess brought in Guilford Dudley, who com-

She learns the fortune intended for her, but she does not believe it.

* Bocardo—who tells the story as it was told by Lady Jane herself to Abbot Feckenham.

CH. 30. manded Lady Jane, on her allegiance as a wife, to
 A.D. 1553. return with him; and, 'not choosing to be disobe-
 July 9. dient to her husband,' she consented. The duchess Lady Northumberland carried her off, and kept her for three or four takes her from her mother. days a prisoner. Afterwards she was taken to a house of the duke's at Chelsea, where she remained till Sunday, the 9th of July, when a message was brought that she was wanted immediately at Sion House, to receive an order from
 the king.

She went alone. There was no one at the palace when she arrived; but immediately after Northumberland came, attended by Pembroke, Northampton, Huntingdon, and Arundel. The Earl of Pembroke, as he approached, knelt to kiss her hand. Lady Northumberland and Lady Northampton entered, and the duke, as President of the Council, rose to speak.

Edward
 dies, and
 the council
 receive her
 as queen,

Northum-
 berland
 explaining the grounds
 on which Mary and Elizabeth
 had been set aside.

'The king,' he said, 'was no more. A godly life had been followed, as a consolation to their sorrows, by a godly end, and in leaving the world he had not forgotten his duty to his subjects. His Majesty had prayed on his death-bed that Almighty God would protect the realm from false opinions, and especially from his unworthy sister;
 he had reflected that both the Lady Mary and the Lady Elizabeth had been cut off by act of parliament from the succession as illegitimate;* the Lady Mary had been disobedient to her father;

* La detta maesta haveva ben | riconoscere Maria overo Eliza-
 considerato un atto di Parlia- | betha Sorelle per heredi della
 mento nel quale fu gia deli- | corona fusse tenuto traditore.—
 berato che qualunque volesse | BAORDO.

she had been again disobedient to her brother; she was a capital and principal enemy of God's word; and both she and her sister were bastards born; King Henry did not intend that the crown should be worn by either of them; King Edward, therefore, had, before his death, bequeathed it to his cousin the Lady Jane; and, should the Lady Jane die without children, to her younger sister; and he had entreated the council, for their honours' sake and for the sake of the realm, to see that his will was observed.'

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
July 9.

Northumberland, as he concluded, dropt on his knees; the four lords knelt with him, and, doing homage to the Lady Jane as queen, they swore that they would keep their faith or lose their lives in her defence.

Lady Jane shook, covered her face with her hands, and fell fainting to the ground. Her first simple grief was for Edward's death; she felt it as the loss of a dearly loved brother. The weight of her own fortune was still more agitating; when she came to herself, she cried that it could not be; the crown was not for her, she could not bear it—she was not fit for it. Then, knowing nothing of the falsehoods which Northumberland had told her, she clasped her hands, and, in a revulsion of feeling, she prayed God that if the great place to which she was called was indeed justly hers, He would give her grace to govern for his service and for the welfare of his people.*

Lady Jane receives the information with infinite alarm.

* Mr. John Gough Nichols, the accomplished editor | of so many of the best publications of the Camden Society,

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.

July 9.

The king's death is acknowledged, and the troops are sworn to Lady Jane.

So passed Sunday, the 9th of July, at Sion House. In London, the hope of first securing Mary being disappointed, the king's death had been publicly acknowledged; circulars were sent out to the sheriffs, mayors, and magistrates in the usual style, announcing the accession of Queen Jane, and the troops were sworn man by man to the new sovereign. Sir William Petre and Sir John Cheke waited on the Emperor's ambassador to express a hope that the alteration in the succession would not affect the good understanding between the courts of England and Flanders. The preachers were set to work to pacify the citizens; and, if Scheyfne is to be believed, a blood cement was designed to strengthen the new throne; and Gardiner, the Duke of Norfolk, and Lord Courtenay,* were directed to prepare for death in three days.† But Northumberland would scarcely have risked an act of gratuitous tyranny. Norfolk, being under attainder, might have been put to death without violation of the forms of law, by warrant from the crown; but Gardiner was uncondemned, and Courtenay had never been accused of crime.

July 10.

The next day, Monday, the 10th of July, the throws a doubt on the authenticity of this scene, being unable to find contemporary authority for it. It comes to us, through Baoardo, from Lady Jane herself.

* Edward Lord Courtenay was son of the executed Marquis of Exeter and great grandson of Edward IV. He was thrown into the Tower with his father when a little boy, and in that confinement, in fifteen years, he had grown to manhood. Of him and his fortunes all that need be said will unfold itself.

† Scheyfne to Charles V., July 10: MS. Rolls House.

royal barges came down the Thames from Richmond; and at three o'clock in the afternoon Lady Jane landed at the broad staircase at the Tower, as queen, in undesired splendour. A few scattered groups of spectators stood to watch the arrival; but it appeared, from their silence, that they had been brought together chiefly by curiosity. As the gates closed, the heralds-at-arms, with a company of the archers of the guard, rode into the city, and at the cross in Cheapside, Paul's Cross, and Fleet-street they proclaimed 'that the Lady Mary was unlawfully begotten, and that the Lady Jane Grey was queen.' The ill-humour of London was no secret, and some demonstration had been looked for in Mary's favour;* but here, again, there was only silence. The heralds cried 'God save the Queen!' The archers waved their caps and cheered, but the crowd looked on impassively. One youth only, Gilbert Potter, whose name for those few days passed into Fame's trumpet, ventured to exclaim, 'The Lady Mary has the better title.' Gilbert's master, one 'Ninian Sanders,' denounced the boy to the guard, and he was seized. Yet a misfortune, thought to be providential, in a few hours befel Ninian Sanders. Going home to his house down the river, in the July evening, he was overturned and drowned as he was shooting London Bridge in his wherry; the boatmen, who were the instruments of Providence, escaped.

Nor did the party in the Tower rest their first

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.

July 10.

Lady Jane
is brought
in state to the Tower.She is proclaimed queen in London,
amidst general
silence.Gilbert Potter and his master.

CH. 30. night there with perfect satisfaction. In the evening messengers came in from the eastern counties with news of the Lady Mary, and with letters from herself. She had written to Renard and Scheyfne to tell them that she was in good hands, and for the moment was safe. She had proclaimed herself queen. She had sent addresses to the peers, commanding them on their allegiance to come to her; and she begged the ambassadors to tell her instantly whether she might look for assistance from Flanders; on the active support of the Emperor, so far as she could judge, the movements of her friends would depend.

A.D. 1553.
July 10.
Letters arrive in London from Mary, who has proclaimed her own accession in Norfolk.

The ambassadors sent a courier to Brussels for instructions; but, pending Charles's judgment to the contrary, they thought they had better leave Mary's appeal unanswered till they could see how events would turn. There was one rumour current indeed that she had from ten to fifteen thousand men with her; but this they could ill believe. For themselves, they expected every hour to hear that she had been taken by Lord Warwick and Lord Robert Dudley, who were gone in pursuit of her, and had been put to death.*

The Lords who were with the new queen were not so confident. They were in late consultation with the Duchess of Northumberland and the Duchess of Suffolk, when, after nightfall, a letter was brought in to them also from Mary. The Lords ordered the messenger

* Renard to Charles V.: Papiers d'Etat du Cardinal Granvelle, vol. iv.

into arrest. The seal of the packet was broken, and the letter read aloud. It was dated the day before, Sunday, July 9:—

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.

July 10.

She writes
to the Lords.

‘My Lords,’ wrote Mary, ‘we greet you well, and have received sure advertisement that our deceased brother the king, our late Sovereign Lord, is departed to God’s mercy; which news how they be woeful to our heart He only knoweth to whose will and pleasure we must and do submit us and all our wills. But in this so lamentable a case that is, to wit, now, after his Majesty’s departure and death, concerning the crown and governance of this realm of England, that which hath been provided by act of parliament and the testament and last will of our dearest father, you know—the realm and the whole world knoweth. The rolls and records appear, by the authority of the king our said father, and the king our said brother, and the subjects of this realm; so that we verily trust there is no true subject that can pretend to be ignorant thereof; and of our part we have ourselves caused, and as God shall aid and strengthen us, shall cause, our right and title in this behalf to be published and proclaimed accordingly.

She claims
the crown
as her right.

‘And, albeit, in this so weighty a matter, it seemeth strange that the dying of our said brother upon Thursday at night last past, we hitherto had no knowledge from you thereof; yet we consider your wisdom and prudence to be such, that having eftsoons amongst you debated, pondered, and well-weighed the present case, with our estate, with your own estate, the com-

CH. 30. monwealth, and all our honours, we shall and may conceive great hope and trust, with much assurance in your loyalty and service; and therefore, for the time, we interpret and take things not for the worst; and that ye yet will, like noblemen, work the best. Nevertheless, we are not ignorant of your consultation to undo the provisions made for our preferment, nor of the great banded provisions forcible whereunto ye be assembled and prepared, by whom and to what end God and you know; and nature can fear some evil. But be it that some consideration politic, or whatsoever thing else, hath moved you there-unto; yet doubt ye not, my Lords, but we can take all these your doings in gracious part, being also right ready to remit and also pardon the same, with that freely to eschew bloodshed and vengeance against all those that can or will intend the same; trusting also assuredly you will take and accept this grace and virtue in good part as appertaineth, and that we shall not be enforced to use the service of other our true subjects and friends which, in this our just and rightful cause, God, in whom our whole affiance is, shall send us.

A.D. 1553.
 July 10.

If the council will return to their duties she will pardon
 their conduct to her;

And she requires them to proclaim her accession in London.

‘ Whereupon, my Lords, we require and charge
 you, and every of you, on your allegiance, which you owe to God and us, and to none other, that for our honour and the surety of our realm, only
 you will employ yourselves; and forthwith, upon receipt hereof, cause our right and title to the crown and government of this realm to be proclaimed in our city of London, and such other places as to your wisdom shall seem good, and as

to this cause appertaineth, not failing hereof, as CH. 30.
our very trust is in you; and this our letter,
signed with our own hand, shall be your sufficient A.D. 1553.
warrant.* July 10.

The Lords, when the letter was read to the end, looked uneasily in each other's faces. The ladies screamed, sobbed, and were carried off in hysterics. There was yet time to turn back; and had the Reformation been, as he pretended, the true concern of the Duke of Northumberland, he would have brought Mary back himself, bound by conditions which, in her present danger, she would have accepted. But Northumberland cared as little for religion as for any other good thing. He was a great criminal, throwing a stake for a crown; and treason is too conscious of its guilt to believe retreat from the first step to be possible.

Another blow was in store for him that night, before he laid his head upon his pillow. Lady Jane, knowing nothing of the letter from Mary, had retired to her apartment, when the Marquis of Winchester came in to wish her joy. He had brought the crown with him, which she had not sent for; he desired her to put it on, and see if it required alteration. She said it would do very well as it was. He then told her that, before her coronation, another crown was to be made for her husband. Lady Jane started; and it seemed as if for the first time the dreary suspicion crossed her mind that she was, after all, but the puppet of the ambition of the duke to raise his family to the throne. Winchester retired, and she sate indig-

Lord Winchester
tells Lady Jane that her husband is to be made
king.

CH. 30. nant till Guilford Dudley appeared, when she told him that, young as she was, she knew that the crown of England was not a thing to be trifled with. There was no Dudley in Edward's will, and, before he could be crowned, the consent of parliament must be first asked and obtained. The boy-husband went whining to his mother, while Jane sent for Arundel and Pembroke, and told them that it was not for her to appoint kings. She would make her husband a duke, if he desired it; that was within her prerogative; but king she would not make him. As she was speaking, the Duchess of Northumberland rushed in with her son, fresh from the agitation of Mary's letter. The mother stormed; Guilford cried like a spoilt child that he would be no duke, he would be a king; and, when Jane stood firm, the duchess bade him come away, and not share the bed of an ungrateful and disobedient wife.†

A.D. 1553.

July 10.

Lady Jane

tells Guilford Dudley that he cannot be king without the consent of

parliament; she will make

him duke,

but not

king.

The first experience of royalty had brought small pleasure with it. Dudley's kingship was set aside for the moment, and was soon forgotten in more alarming matters. To please his mother, or to pacify his vanity, he was called 'Your Grace.' He was allowed to preside in the council, so long as a council remained, and he dined alone‡—tinsel distinctions, for which the poor wretch had to pay dearly.

July 11.

The next day restored the conspirators to their courage. No authentic accounts came in of disturbances. London was still quiet; so quiet, that it was thought safe to nail Gilbert Potter by the ears in the pillory, and after sufficient suffering, to slice them off with a knife. Lord Warwick, and Lord Robert were still absent, and no news had come from them—a proof that they were still in pursuit. The duke made up his mind that Mary was watching only for an opportunity to escape to Flanders; and the ships in the river, with a thousand men-at-arms on board them, were sent to watch the Essex coast, and to seize her, could they find opportunity. Meanwhile he himself penned a reply to her letter. ‘The Lady Jane,’ he said, ‘by the antient laws of the realm,’ and ‘by letters patent of the late king,’ signed by himself, and countersigned by the nobility, was rightful queen of England. The divorce of Catherine of Arragon from Henry VIII. had been prescribed by the laws of God, pronounced by the Church of England, and confirmed by act of parliament; the daughter of Catherine was, therefore, illegitimate, and could not inherit; and the duke warned her to forbear, at her peril, from molesting her lawful sovereign, or turning her people from their allegiance. If she would submit and accept the position of a subject, she should receive every reasonable attention which it was in the power of the queen to show to her.

* Le quale parole io senti con mio gran dispiacere.—BAOARDO.

† Ibid.

‡ Se faisoit servir de mesme.—Renard to Charles V.: MS. Rolls House.

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.

July 11.

Gilbert
Potter is pilloried.Ships are sent to Yarmouth
to take Mary prisoner.Northumberland
answers
Mary's letter, and requires her
to submit to her lawful sovereign.

During the day rumours of all kinds were flying, but Mary's friends in London saw no reasonable grounds for hope. Lord Robert was supposed by Renard* to be on his way to the

* Renard to Charles V.: MS. Rolls House.

CH. 30. Tower with the Princess as his prisoner; and if she was once within the Tower's walls, all hope was over. It was not till Wednesday morning that the duke became really alarmed. Then at once, from all sides, messengers came in with unwelcome tidings. The Dudleys had come up with Mary the day before, as she was on her way from Keninghal to Framlingham. They had dashed forward upon her escort, but their own men turned sharp round, declared for the Princess, and attempted to seize them; they had been saved only by the speed of their horses.* In the false calm of the two preceding days, Lord Bath had stolen across the country into Norfolk. Lord Mordaunt and Lord Wharton had sent their sons; Sir William Drury, Sir John Skelton, Sir Henry Bedingfield, and many more, had gone in the same direction. Lord Sussex had declared also for Mary; and, worse than all, Lord Derby had risen in Cheshire, and was reported to be marching south with twenty thousand men.† Scarcely were these news digested, when Sir Edmund Peckham, cofferer of the household, was found to have gone off with the treasure under his charge. Sir Edward Hastings, Lord Huntingdon's brother, had called out the musters of Buckinghamshire in Mary's name, and Peckham had joined him; while Sir Peter Carew, the very hope and stay of the western Protestants, had proclaimed Mary in the towns of Devonshire.

A.D. 1553.
July 12.

The Dudleys attempt to take Mary prisoner, but fail.

Mary's friends begin to show themselves, and collect round her in Norfolk.

Buckinghamshire rises.

* Renard to Charles V.: MS. Rolls House.

† Queen Jane and Queen Mary. Renard to Charles V.

Now, when too late, it was seen how large an error had been committed in permitting the Princess's escape. But it was vain to waste time in regrets. Her hasty levies, at best, could be but rudely armed; the duke had trained troops and cannon, and, had he been free to act, with no enemies but those in the field against him, he had still the best of the game. But Suffolk and Northampton, the least able of the council, were, nevertheless, the only members of it on whom he could rely. To whom but to himself could he trust the army which must meet Mary in the field? If he led the army himself, whom could he leave in charge of London, the Tower, and Lady Jane? Winchester and Arundel knew his dilemma, and deliberately took advantage of it. The guard, when first informed that they were to take the field, refused to march. After a communication with the Marquis of Winchester, they withdrew their objections, and professed themselves willing to go. Northumberland, uneasy at their conduct, or requiring a larger force, issued a proclamation offering tenpence a day to volunteers who would go to bring in the Lady Mary.* The lists were soon filled, but filled with the retainers and servants of his secret enemies.†

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
July 12.

The duke finds that she must be met in the field.

The council determine to betray him, and tamper with the troops.

The men being thus collected, Suffolk was first

* Grey Friars' Chronicle.

† Ille impigre quidem utpote
cujus res agebatur, proponit magna stipendia; conducit mili-
tem partim invitum partim
perfidum; constabant enim ma-

jori ex parte satellitio nobilium
qui secreto Mariæ favebant.— Julius Terentianus to John ab Ulmis: Epistolæ Tigurinæ,
p. 243.

CH. 30.
 A.D. 1553.
 July 12.
 The duke
 can find no
 one who can be trusted
 to lead
 them.

The council tell him
 that he must go
 himself.

He sends to Paris for assistance,

thought of to lead them, or else Lord Grey de Wilton;* but Suffolk was inefficient, and his daughter could not bring herself to part with him; Grey was a good soldier, but he had been a friend of Somerset, and the duke had tried hard to involve him with Arundel and Paget in Somerset's ruin.† Northampton's truth could have been depended upon, but Northampton four years before had been defeated by a mob of Norfolk peasants. Northumberland, the council said, must go himself—'there was no remedy.' No man, on all accounts, could be so fit as he; 'he had achieved the victory in Norfolk once already, and was so feared, that none durst lift their weapons against him;‡ Suffolk in his absence should command the Tower. Had the duke dared, he would have delayed; but every moment that he remained inactive added to Mary's strength, and whatever he did he must risk something. He resolved to go, and as the plot was thickening, he sent Sir Henry Dudley to Paris to entreat the king to protect Calais against Charles, should the latter move upon it in his cousin's interest.

Noailles had assured him that this and larger favours would be granted without difficulty; while, as neither Renard nor his companions had as yet acknowledged Lady Jane, and were notoriously in correspondence with Mary, the French ambassador suggested also that he would do wisely to take the initiative himself, to send Renard his passports, and commit the country to war with the Emperor.* Northumberland would not venture the full length to which Noailles invited him; but he sent Sir John Mason and Lord Cobham to Renard, with an intimation that the English treason laws were not to be trifled with. If he and his companions dared to meddle in matters which did not concern them, their privileges as ambassadors should not protect them from extremity of punishment.†

* Renard to Charles V.: Rolls House MSS.

† Ibid.

‡ Chronicle of Queen Jane.

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.

July 22.

And threatens the Flemish ambassadors with the treason laws.

Newmarket was chosen for the rendezvous of the army. The men were to go down in companies, in whatever way they could travel most expeditiously, with the guns and ammunition waggons. The duke himself intended to set out on Friday at dawn. In his calculations of the chances, hope still predominated—his cannon would give him the advantage in the field, and he trusted to the Protestant spirit in London to prevent a revolution in his absence. But he took the precaution of making the council entangle themselves more completely by taking out a commission under the Great Seal, as general of the army, which they were forced to sign; and before he left the Tower, he made a parting appeal to their good faith. If he believed they would betray him, he said, he could still provide for his own safety; but, as they were well aware that Lady Jane was on the throne by no will of her own, but through his influence and theirs, so he trusted

Troops are sent on to Newmarket.

The duke takes out a commission under the Great Seal, and appeals to the council to keep their oaths to Lady Jane.

* NOAILLES, vol. ii.

† Ajoutant menace de la rigueur de leurs lois barbares.—Renard to Charles V.: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv.

CH. 30. her to their honours to keep the oaths which they had sworn. 'They were all in the same
 A.D. 1553. guilt,' one of them answered; 'none could July 14. excuse themselves.' Arundel especially wished the duke God speed upon his way, and regretted only that he was not to accompany him to the field.*

The duke
 and his sons leave
 London.

This was on Thursday evening. Northumberland slept that night at Whitehall. The following morning he rode out of London, accompanied by his four sons, Northampton, Grey, and about six hundred men. The streets were thronged with spectators, but all observed the same ominous
 silence with which they had received the heralds'
 proclamation. 'The people press to see us,' the duke said, 'but not one saith God speed us.†

The council hesitate
 to act
 openly till they are sure of the Earl of Pembroke ;

The principal conspirator was now out of the way; his own particular creatures—Sir Thomas and Sir Henry Palmer, Sir John Gates, who had commanded the Tower guard, had gone with him.
 Northampton was gone. The young Dudleys were gone all but Guilford. Suffolk alone remained of the faction definitely attached to the duke; and the duke was marching to the destruction which they had prepared for him.
 But prudence still warned those who were loyal
 to Mary to wait before they declared themselves;
 the event was still uncertain; and the disposition of the Earl of Pembroke might not yet, perhaps, have been perfectly ascertained.

Pembroke, in the black volume of appropria-

* Chronicle of Queen Jane.

† Ibid.

tions, was the most deeply compromised. Pembroke, in Wilts and Somerset, where his new lands lay, was hated for his oppression of the poor, and had much to fear from a Catholic sovereign, could a Catholic sovereign obtain
 the reality as well as the name of power;
 Pembroke, so said Northumberland, had been
 the first to propose the conspiracy to him,
 while his eldest son had married Catherine Grey. But, as Northumberland's designs began to ripen, he had endeavoured to steal from the court; he was a distinguished soldier, yet he was never named to command the army which was to go against Mary; Lord Herbert's marriage was outward and nominal merely—a form,
 which had not yet become a reality, and never did. Although Pembroke was the first of the council to do homage to Jane, Northumberland evidently doubted him. He was acting and would continue to act for his own personal interests only. With his vast estates and vast hereditary influence in South Wales and on the Border, he could bring a larger force into the field than any other single nobleman in England; and he could purchase the secure possession of his acquisitions
 by a well-timed assistance to Mary as readily as
 by lending his strength to buttress the throne of her rival.

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
 July 14.

And Pem-
 broke had,
 perhaps,
 not yet resolved on
 the course
 which he would pursue.

Of the rest of the council, Winchester and Arundel had signed the letters patent with a deliberate intention of deserting or betraying Northumberland, whenever a chance should present itself, and of carrying on their secret mea-

24 The Council prepare to declare for Mary.

CH. 30. sures in Mary's favour with greater security.*
 A.D. 1553. The other noblemen in the Tower perhaps im- July 14. perfectly understood each other. Cranmer had General taken part unwillingly with Lady Jane; but disposition he meant to keep his promise, having once given of the coun- it. Bedford had opposed the duke up to the cil and the signature, and might be supposed to adhere to Secretaries his original opinion; but he was most likely of State. hesitating, while Lord Russell had been trusted
with the command of the garrison at Windsor.
Sir Thomas Cheyne and Shrewsbury might be counted among Mary's friends; the latter certainly. Of the three secretaries, Cecil's opposition had put his life in jeopardy; Petre was the friend and confidant of Paget, and would act as Paget should advise; Cheke, a feeble enthusiast, was committed to the duke.

Cecil brings
 them together, and they are joined by Paget.

The task of bringing the council together was undertaken by Cecil. Cecil and Winchester worked on Bedford; and Bedford made himself responsible for his son, for the troops at Windsor, and generally for the western counties. The first important step was to readmit Paget to the council. Fresh risings were reported in Northampton-

* Aliqui subscripserunt, id quod postea compertum est, ut facilius fallerent Northumbrum, cujus consilio hæc omnia videbant fieri et tegerent conspirationem quam adornabant in auxilium Mariæ.—Julius Terentianus to John ab Ulmis: Epistolæ TIGURINÆ, p. 242. John Knox allowed his vehemence to carry him too far against the Marquis of Winchester, who unquestionably was not one of those who advised the scheme of Northumberland. In the 'aliqui' of Julius Terentianus, the letters of Renard, of Scheyfne, enable us to identify both him and Arundel; but there must have been many more, in the council or out of it, who were acting in concert with them.

shire and Lincolnshire;* Sir John Williams was proclaiming Mary round Oxford; and on Friday night or Saturday morning news came from the fleet which might be considered decisive as to the duke's prospects. The vessels, so carefully equipped, which left the Thames on the 12th, had been driven into Yarmouth harbour by stress of weather. Sir Henry Jerningham was in the town raising men for Mary; and knowing that the crews had been pressed, and that there had been desertions among the troops before they were embarked,† he ventured boldly among the ships. 'Do you want our captains?' some one said to him. 'Yea, marry,' was the answer. 'Then they shall go with you,' the men shouted, 'or they shall go to the bottom.' Officers, sailors, troops, all declared for Queen Mary, and landed with their arms and artillery. The report was borne upon the winds; it was known in a few hours in London; it was known in the duke's army, which was now close to Cambridge, and was the signal for the premeditated mutiny. 'The noblemen's tenants refused to serve their lords against Queen Mary.‡ Northumberland sent a courier at full speed to the council for reinforcements. The courier returned 'with but a slender answer.' §

CH. 30.
A.D. 1553.
July 15.

The sailors
and troops
in the fleet
declare for Mary,

And the duke's
army begin
to mutiny.

The Lords in London, however, were still under the eyes of the Tower garrison, who watched them narrowly. Their first meeting to

* Cecil's Submission, printed by TYTLER, vol. ii.

† Scheyfne to Charles V.: Rolls House MSS.

‡ Chronicle of Queen Jane.

§ Ibid.

CH. 30. form their plans was within the Tower walls, and
 A.D. 1553. Arundel said 'he liked not the air.'* Pembroke July 15. and Cheyne attempted to escape, but failed to
 The Tower evade the guard; Winchester made an excuse to guard go to his own house, but he was sent for and watches brought back at midnight. Though Mary might the council. succeed, they might still lose their own lives,
 which they were inclined to value.

July 16. On Sunday, the 16th, the preachers again Ridley exerted themselves. Ridley shrieked against preaches at Mary at Paul's Cross;† John Knox, more wisely, Paul's at Amersham, in Buckinghamshire, foretold the Cross, approaching retribution from the giddy ways of the past years; Buckinghamshire, Catholic and Protestant, was arming to the teeth; and he was speaking at the peril of his life among the troopers of Sir Edward Hastings.

And John 'Oh England!' cried the saddened Reformer, Knox 'now is God's wrath kindled against thee—now preaches at hath he begun to punish as he hath threatened Amersham. by his true prophets and messengers. He hath taken from thee the crown of thy glory, and hath left thee without honour, and this appeareth to be only the beginning of sorrows. The heart,
 the tongue, the hand of one Englishman is bent
 against another, and division is in the realm,
 which is a sign of desolation to come. Oh, England, England! if thy mariners and thy governors shall consume one another, shalt not thou suffer shipwreck? Oh England, alas!
 these plagues are poured upon thee because thou

* Cecil's Submission : TYTLER, vol. ii.

† Stow.

wouldst not know the time of thy most gentle visitation.*

CH. 30.

At Cambridge, on the same day, another notable man preached—Edwin Sandys, then Protestant Vice-Chancellor of the University, and afterwards Archbishop of York. Northumberland the preceding evening brought his mutinous troops into the town. He sent for Parker, Lever, Bill, and Sandys to sup with him, and told them he required their prayers, or he and his friends were like to be ‘made deacons of.’† Sandys, the vice-chancellor, must address the university the next morning from the pulpit.

A.D. 1553.
July 16.
The duke
at Cambridge.

Sandys rose at three o'clock in the summer twilight, took his Bible, and prayed with closed eyes that he might open at a fitting text. His eyes, when he lifted them, were resting on the 16th of the 1st of Joshua: ‘The people answered Joshua, saying, all thou commandest us we will do; and whithersoever thou sendest us we will go; according as we hearkened unto Moses, so will we hearken unto thee, only the Lord thy God be with thee as he was with Moses.’

Edwin Sandys
compares the duke to Joshua;

‘The application was obvious. Edward was Moses, the duke was Joshua; and if a sermon could have saved the cause, Lady Jane would have been secure upon her throne.‡

* Account of a Sermon at Amersham: Admonition to the Faithful in England, by JOHN KNOX.

† Some jest, perhaps, upon a shorn crown; at any rate, a euphemism for decapitation; for Foxe, who tells the story, says,

‘and even so it came to pass, for he and Sir John Gates, who was then at table, were made deacons ere it was long after on the Tower Hill.’—FOXE, vol. viii. p. 590.

‡ Ibid.

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
 July 16.
 But the English people cannot regard
 him in the same light.

But the comparison, if it held at all, held only in its least agreeable features. The deliverers of England from the Egyptian bondage of the Papacy had led the people out into a wilderness where the manna had been stolen by the leaders, and there were no tokens of a promised land. To the universities the Reformation had brought with it desolation. To the people of England it had brought misery and want. The once open hand was closed; the once open heart was hardened; the ancient loyalty of man to man was exchanged for the scuffling of selfishness; the change of faith had brought with it no increase of freedom, and less of charity. The prisons were crowded, as before, with sufferers for opinion, and the creed of a thousand years was made a crime by a doctrine of yesterday; monks and nuns wandered by hedge and highway, as missionaries of discontent; and pointed with bitter effect to the fruits of the new belief, which had been crimsoned in the blood of thousands of English peasants. The English people were not yet so much in love with wretchedness that they would set aside for the sake of it a princess whose injuries pleaded for her, whose title was affirmed by act of parliament. In the tyranny under which the nation was groaning, the moderate men of all creeds looked to the accession of Mary as to the rolling away of some bad black nightmare.

The duke's
 army refuses decisively to fight against
 Mary.

On Monday Northumberland made another effort to move forward. His troops followed him as far as Bury, and then informed him decisively that they would not bear arms against their lawful sovereign. He fell back on Cambridge, and again wrote to London for help. As a last resource, Sir Andrew Dudley, instructed, it is likely, by his brother, gathered up a hundred thousand crowns' worth of plate and jewels from the treasury in the Tower, and started for France to interest Henry—to bribe him, it was said, by a promise of Guisnes and Calais—to send an army into England.* The duke foresaw, and dared the indignation of the people; but he had left himself no choice except between treason to the country or now inevitable destruction.† When he called in the help of France he must have known well that his ally, with a successful army in England, would prevent indeed the accession of Mary Tudor, but as surely would tear in pieces the paper title of the present queen, and snatch the crown for his own Mary, the Queen of Scots, and the bride of the Dauphin.

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
July 17.

Sir Andrew Dudley flies to Paris to beg that a French army may be sent to England.

But the council was too quick for Dudley. A secret messenger followed or attended him to

* Renard to Charles V. : Rolls House MSS.

† La peine où se retreuve ledict duc est qu'il ne se ose fier en personne, pour n'avoir faict ou donné occasion à personne de l'aimer,—que a meu envoyer en France le Millor Dudley son frère, pour l'assurer du secours que luy a esté promis par le roy de France, et le prier en faire demonstration pour intimider ceulx de par deça. Car encores qu'il entende qu'il dégonstera davantage ceulx du pays pour y

amener François, si est ce craignant d'estre rebouté de son emprinse, et d'estre massacré du peuple et sa generation, et que ma dicte dame Marie ne parvienne à la couronne, il ne respectera chose quelconque : plustôt donnera il pied aux François ou peys : tel est le couraige d'ung homme tiran, obstiné, et resolu, signamment quant il est question de se démesurer pour regner. — Renard to Charles V. : Granvelle Papers, vol. iv. p. 38.

CH. 30. Calais, where he was arrested, the treasure recovered, and his despatches taken from him.

A.D. 1553.
July 19.

The council escape from the Tower to Baynard's Castle, and send for the Lord Mayor.

The counter-revolution could now be accomplished without bloodshed and without longer delay. On Wednesday the 19th word came that the Earl of Oxford had joined Mary. A letter was written to Lord Rich admonishing him not to follow Oxford's example, but to remain true to Queen Jane, which the council were required to sign. Had they refused, they would probably have been massacred.* Towards the middle of the day, Winchester, Arundel, Pembroke, Shrewsbury, Bedford, Cheyne, Paget, Mason, and Petre found means of passing the gates, and made their way to Baynard's Castle,† where they sent for the mayor, the aldermen, and other great persons of the city. When they were all assembled, Arundel was the first to speak.

The country, he said, was on the brink of civil war, and if they continued to support the pretensions of Lady Jane Grey to the crown, civil war would inevitably break out. In a few more days or weeks the child would be in arms against the father, the brother against the brother; the quarrels of religion would add fury to the struggle; the French would interfere on one side, the Spaniards on the other, and in such a conflict the triumph of either party would be almost equally injurious to the honour, unity, freedom, and happiness of England. The friends of the commonwealth, in the face of so tremendous a danger, would not obstinately persist in encouraging the pretensions of a faction. It was for them where they sate to decide if there should be peace or war, and he implored them, for the sake of the country, to restore the crown to her who was their lawful sovereign.

* The letter is among the Lansdowne MSS. It is in the hand of Sir John Cheke, and dated July 19. The signatures are Cranmer, Goodrich, Winchester, Bedford, Suffolk, Arundel, Shrewsbury, Pembroke, Darcy, Paget, Cheyne, Cotton, Petre, Cheke, Baker, Bowes.

† Fronting the river, about three quarters of a mile above London Bridge. The original castle of Baynard the Norman had fallen into ruins at the end of the fifteenth century. Henry VII. built a palace on the site of it, which retained the name.

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
July 19.
Lord Arundel proposes that the crown shall be restored to its lawful owner.

Pembroke rose next. The words of Lord Arundel, he said, were true and good, and not to be gainsaid. What others thought he knew not; for himself, he was so convinced, that he would fight in the quarrel with any man; and if words are not enough, he cried, flashing his sword out of the scabbard, 'this blade shall make Mary queen, or I will lose my life.'*

Pembroke follows on the same side, and swears that Mary shall be queen.

Not a voice was raised for the Twelfth-day Queen, as Lady Jane was termed, in scornful pity, by Noailles. Some few persons thought that, before they took a decisive step, they should send notice to Northumberland, and give him time to secure his pardon. But it was held to be a needless stretch of consideration; Shrewsbury and Mason hastened off to communicate with Renard;† while a hundred and fifty men were marched directly to the Tower gates,

* E quando le persuasioni del conte d'Arundel non habiano luogo appresso di voi, o questa spada fara Reina Maria, o perdero io la vita.—BAOARDO.

† Renard had been prepared, by a singular notice, to expect their coming, and to suspect their good faith. Ce matin, he wrote, relating the counter-revolution to the Emperor; ce matin, à bonne heure, il y a venu une vieille femme de soixante ans en nostre logis pour nous adver-

CH. 30. and the keys were demanded in the queen's name.

A.D. 1553.
July 19.
Suffolk
tells Lady Jane that
she is queen no longer.

She listens
with quiet pleasure,
and begs
that she may now
go home.

Pembroke
proclaims Mary queen
amidst the exultations
of the
people.

It is said that Suffolk was unprepared: but the goodness of his heart and the weakness of his mind alike saved him from attempting a useless resistance: the gates were opened, and the unhappy father rushed to his daughter's room. He clutched at the canopy under which she was sitting, and tore it down; she was no longer queen, he said, and such distinctions were not for one of her station. He then told her briefly of the revolt of the council. She replied that his present words were more welcome to her than those in which he had advised her to accept the crown;* her reign being at an end, she asked innocently if she might leave the Tower and go home.† But the Tower was a place not easy to leave, save by one route too often travelled.

Meanwhile the Lords, with the mayor and the heralds, went to the Cross at Cheapside to proclaim Mary queen. Pembroke himself stood out to read; and this time there was no reason to complain of a silent audience. He could utter but one sentence before his voice was lost in the shout of joy which thundered into the air. 'God save the Queen,' 'God save the Queen,' rung out from tens of thousands of throats. 'God save the Queen,' cried Pembroke himself, when he tir que l'on deust faire scavoir à madicte dame Marie qu'elle se

donna garde de ceulx de conseil
car ils la vouloient tromper soubz
couleur de luy monstrier affection.
— Granvelle Papers, vol. iv.

* Bacoardo to Charles V.:
Rolls House MSS.

† Narrative of Edward Underhill: Harleian MSS. 425.

had done, and flung up his jewelled cap and tossed his purse among the crowd. The glad news spread like lightning through London, and the pent-up hearts of the citizens poured themselves out in a torrent of exultation. Above the human cries, the long-silent church-bells clashed again into life; first began St. Paul's, where happy chance had saved them from destruction; then, one by one, every peal which had been spared caught up the sound; and through the summer evening and the summer night, and all the next day, the metal tongues from tower and steeple gave voice to England's gladness. The Lords, surrounded by the shouting multitude, walked in state to St. Paul's, where the choir again sang a Te Deum, and the unused organ rolled out once more its mighty volume of music. As they came out again, at the close of the service, the apprentices were heaping piles of wood for bonfires at the cross-ways. The citizens were spreading tables in the streets, which their wives were loading with fattest capons and choicest wines; there was free feasting for all comers; and social jealousies, religious hatreds, were forgotten for the moment in the ecstasy of the common delight. Even the retainers of the Dudleys, in fear or joy, tore their badges out of their caps, and trampled on them.*

CH. 30.
A.D. 1553.
July 19.

The bells
peal day
and night.

Te Deum
is sung at St. Paul's,
and London feasts
in the streets.

* Renard to Charles V.: Rolls House MSS. All authorities agree in the general description of the state of London. Renard, Noailles, and Baoardo are the most explicit and interesting.

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.

July 19.

The council require the duke to lay down his arms,

At a night session of the council, a letter was written to Northumberland, which Cranmer, Suffolk, and Sir John Cheke consented to sign, ordering him in the name of Queen Mary to lay down his arms. If he complied, the Lords undertook to intercede for his pardon. If he refused, they said that they would hold him as a traitor, and spend their lives in the field against him.*

And write to Mary to ask for their pardons.

While a pursuivant bore the commands of the council to the duke, Arundel and Paget undertook to carry to Mary at Framlingham their petition for forgiveness, in which they declared that they had been innocent at heart of any share in the conspiracy,† and had only delayed coming

* This letter is among the Tanner MSS. in the Bodleian Library at Oxford. It was printed by Stow.

† 'Our bounden duties most humbly remembered to your excellent Majesty. It may like the same to understand, that we, your most humble, faithful, and obedient subjects, having always, God we take to witness, remained your Highness's true and humble subjects in our hearts, ever since the death of our late Sovereign Lord and master your Highness's brother, whom God pardon, and seeing hitherto no possibility to utter our determination without great destruction and bloodshed, both of ourselves and others, till this time, have this day proclaimed in your city of London your Majesty to be our true natural sovereign liege Lady and Queen; most humbly beseeching your Majesty to pardon and remit our former infirmities, and most graciously to accept our meanings, which have been ever to serve your Highness truly, and so shall remain with all our power and force, to the effusion of our blood, as these bearers, our very good Lords, the Earls of Arundel and Paget, can, and be ready more particularly to declare—to whom it may please your excellent Majesty to give firm credence; and thus we do and shall daily pray to Almighty God for the preservation of your most royal person long to reign over us.'—Lansdowne MSS. 3. Endorsed, in Cecil's hand, 'Copy of the Letter of the Lords to the Queen Mary from Baynard's Castle.' The signatures are, unfortunately, wanting.

forward in her favour from a desire to prevent bloodshed. CH. 30.

The two lords immediately mounted and galloped off into the darkness, followed by thirty horse, leaving the lights of illuminated London gleaming behind them. A.D. 1553.
July 19.
Arundel
and Paget
carry the letter.

The duke's position was already desperate: on the 18th, before the proclamation in London, Mary had felt herself strong enough to send orders to the Mayor of Cambridge for his arrest;* and, although he had as yet been personally unmolested, he was powerless in the midst of an army which was virtually in Mary's service.

The news of the revolution in London first reached him by a private hand. He at once sent for Sandys, and, going with him to the market cross, he declared, after one violent clutch at his beard, that he had acted under orders from the council; the council, he understood, had changed their minds, and therefore he would change his mind; therefore he cried, 'God save Queen Mary,' and with a strained effort at a show of satisfaction, he, too, like Pembroke, threw up his cap. The queen, he said to Sandys, was a merciful woman, and there would be a general pardon. 'Though the queen grant you a pardon,' Sandys answered, 'the Lords never will; you can hope nothing from those who now rule'.† The duke, hearing of the change
in London,
proclaims Mary at Cambridge.

It was true that he could hope nothing—the hatred of the whole nation, which before his

* Renard to Charles V.: Rolls House MSS.

† Foxe, vol. viii.

CH. 30. late treasons he had brought upon himself, would clamour to the very heavens for judgment against him. An hour after the proclamation of Mary, Rouge-cross herald arrived with the Lords' letter from London. An order at the same time was read to the troops informing them that they were no longer under the duke's command, and an alderman of the town then ventured to execute the queen's warrant for his arrest. Northumberland was given in charge to a guard of his own soldiers;
 he protested, however, that the council had sent
 no instructions for his detention; and in some uncertainty, or perhaps in compassion for his fate,
 the soldiers obeyed him once more, and let him go. It was then night. He intended to fly;
 but he put it off till the morning, and in the morning his chance was gone. Before he could leave his room he found himself face to face with Arundel, who, after delivering the council's letter to the queen, had hastened to Cambridge to secure him.

A.D. 1553.
 July 20.

The troops
 are disbanded.
 An alderman of Cambridge
 arrests the duke. His soldiers release him.

But the next morning he is again arrested by Arundel.

Northumberland, who, while innocent of crime,
 had faced death on land and sea like a soldier
 and a gentleman, flung himself at the earl's feet.
 'Be good to me, for the love of God,' he cried;
 'consider I have done nothing but by the consent of you and the council.' He knew what kind of consent he had extorted from the council.
 'My Lord,' said Arundel, 'I am sent hither by the Queen's Majesty; and in her name I do arrest
 you.'—'I obey, my Lord,' the duke replied; 'yet shew me mercy, knowing the case as it is.'—
 'My Lord,' was the cold answer, 'you should have sought for mercy sooner; I must do according to my commandment.*

At the same moment Sandys was paying the penalty for his sermon. The university, in haste to purge itself of its heretical elements, met soon after sunrise to depose their vice-chancellor.

Dr. Sandys, who had gone for an early stroll among the meadows to meditate on his position, hearing the congregation-bell ringing, resolved, like a brave man, to front his fortune; he walked to the Senate-house, entered, and took his seat. 'A rabble of Papists' instantly surrounded him. He tried to speak, but the masters of arts shouted 'Traitor;' rough hands shook or dragged him from his chair: and the impatient theologian, in sudden heat, drew his dagger, and 'would have done a mischief with it,' had not some of his friends disarmed him.† He, too, was handed over to a guard, lashed to the back of a lame horse, and carried to London.

Mary, meanwhile, notwithstanding the revolution in her favour, remained a few more days at Framlingham, either suspicious of treachery or uncertain whether there might not be another change. But she was assured rapidly that the danger was at an end by the haste with which the lords and gentlemen who were compromised sought their pardon at her feet. On the 21st and 22nd Clinton, Grey, Fitzgerald, Ormond, Fitzwarren, Sir Henry Sidney, and Sir James Crofts presented themselves and received forgiveness. Cecil wrote, explaining his secret services,

CH. 30.
A.D. 1553.
July 21.

Sandys is seized in the Senate-house, and sent to London.

The Lords who had signed the letters patent apply for pardon, which some receive, and some do not.

* HOLINSHED.

† FOXE, vol. viii. pp. 591-2.

CH. 30. and was taken into favour. Lord Robert and Lord Ambrose Dudley, Northampton and a hundred other gentlemen—Sir Thomas Wyatt
 among them—who had accompanied the duke
 to Bury, were not so fortunate. The queen would not see them, and they were left under arrest. Ridley set out for Norfolk, also, to confess his offences; but, before he arrived at the court,
 he was met by a warrant for his capture, and carried back a prisoner to the Tower.

A.D. 1553.
 July 21.

Mary will bury Edward with Catholic
 rites.

The conspiracy was crushed, and crushed, happily, without bloodshed. The inquiry into its origin, and the punishment of the guilty, could be carried out at leisure. There was one matter, however, which admitted of no delay; Mary's first anxiety, on feeling her crown secure, was the burial of her dead brother, who, through all these scenes, was still lying in his bed in his room at Greenwich. In her first letter to the Imperial ambassadors, the day after the arrival of Arundel
 and Paget at the court, she spoke of this as her greatest care; to their infinite alarm, she announced her intention of inaugurating her reign
 with Requiem and Dirige, and a mass for the repose of his soul.

Their uneasiness requires explanation.

While on matters of religion there was in England almost every variety of opinion, there was a very general consent that the queen should not marry a foreigner. The dread that Mary might form a connexion with some Continental prince, had formed the strongest element in Northumberland's cause; all the Catholics, except the insignificant faction who desired the restoration of the Papal authority,* all the moderate Protestants, wished well to her, but wished to see her married to some English nobleman; and, while her accession was still uncertain, the general opinion had already fixed upon a husband for her in the person of her cousin Edward Courtenay, the imprisoned son of the Marquis of Exeter. The interest of the public in the long confinement of this young nobleman had invested him with all imaginary graces of mind and body. He was the grandchild of a Plantagenet, and a representative of the White Rose. He had suffered from the tyranny, and was supposed to have narrowly escaped murder at the hands of the man whom all England most hated. Nature, birth, circumstances, all seemed to point to him as the king-consort of the realm.† The Emperor had thought of Mary for

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
July 21.
England
desires that Mary shall marry Lord
Courtenay,

* I must again remind my readers of the distinction between Catholic and Papist. Three quarters of the English people were Catholics; that is, they were attached to the hereditary and traditionary doctrines of the Church. They detested, as cordially as the Protestants, the interference of a foreign power, whether secular or spiritual, with English liberty.

† 'Adversity is a good thing. I trust in the Lord to live to see the day her Grace to marry such an one as knoweth what adversity meaneth; so shall we have both a merciful queen and king to their subjects; and would to God I might live to have another virtuous Edward.'—Epistle of Poor Pratt to Gilbert Potter, written July 13: Queen Jane and Queen Mary, Appendix, p. 116. The occasion of this curious epistle was the punishment of Gilbert on the pillory. The writer was a Protestant, and evidently thought the Reformation in greater danger from Northumberland than Mary. 'We have had many prophets and true preachers,' he said, 'which did declare that our king shall be taken away from us, and a tyrant shall reign. The gospel shall be plucked away, and the right heir shall be dispossessed; and all for our unthankfulness. And, thinkest thou not, Gilbert, this world is

CH. 30. his son; and it has been seen that the fear of such an alliance induced the French to support Northumberland. To prevent the injury which the report, if credited in England, would have done to her cause, Mary, on her first flight to Keninghal, empowered Renard to assure the council that she had no thought at all of marrying a stranger. The Emperor and the Bishop of Arras, in assuring Sir Philip Hoby that the French intended to strike for the Queen of Scots, declared that, for themselves, they wished only to see the queen settled in her own realm, as her subjects desired; and especially they would prevent her either from attempting innovations in religion without their consent, or from marrying against their approbation.*

A.D. 1553.
July 21.
And Mary disclaims all desire to marry a foreigner.

Charles professes that he wishes her to do as her subjects desire, as long as her success is uncertain;

But the Emperor's disinterestedness was only the result of his despondency. While the crisis lasted, neither Charles nor Henry of France saw their way to a distinct course of action. Charles, on the 20th of July, ignorant of the events in London, had written to Renard, despairing of Mary's success. Jane Grey he would not recognise; the Queen of Scots, he thought, would shortly be on the English throne. Henry, considering, at any rate, that he might catch something in troubled waters, volunteered to Lord William Howard,† in professed compliance with now come? Yea! truly! and what shall follow, if we repent not in time? The same God will take from us the virtuous Lady Mary our lawful queen, and send such a cruel Pharaoh as the Ragged Bear to rule us, which shall pull and poll us, and utterly destroy us, and bring us in great calamities and miseries.'

* MS. Harleian, 523.

† Governor of Calais.

the demands of Northumberland, to garrison CH. 30.
Guisnes and Calais for him. Howard replied that the French might come to Calais if they desired, A.D. 1553.
July 21.
but their reception might not be to their taste.*

The revolution of the 19th altered the aspect of the situation both at the courts of Paris and of Brussels. The accession of Mary would be no But, as injury to France, provided she could be married soon as in England; and Henry at once instructed she is on Noailles to congratulate the council on her acces- the throne, sion. Noailles himself indeed considered, that, he returns should she take Courtenay for a husband, the to his plan change might, after all, be to their advantage. of marrying
The Emperor, on the other hand, began to think her to again of his original scheme. Knowing that the Philip, English were sincere in their detestation of the Papacy, and imperfectly comprehending the insular distinction between general attachment to Catholic tradition and indifference to Catholic unity, he supposed that the country really was,
on the whole, determined in its adherence to the Reformed opinions. But the political alliance was still of infinite importance to him; and therefore he was anxious beyond everything that And there-
the princess whom he intended to persuade to break fore is her word about her marriage should be discreet and anxious conciliatory about religion. He lost not a mo- that she ment, after hearing that she was proclaimed queen, shall give in sending her his congratulations; but he sent no offence with them an earnest admonition to be cautious to her sub-to be content with the free exercise for herself jects in religion.

CH. 30. of her own creed, to take no step whatever
 A. D. 1553. without the sanction of parliament, and to listen
 July 21. to no one who would advise her, of her own authority, to set aside the Act of Uniformity. Her first duty was to provide for the quiet of the realm;
 and she must endeavour, by prudence and moderation, to give reasonable satisfaction to her subjects of all opinions. Above all things, let her remember to be a good Englishwoman (bonne Anglaise).*

Renard,
 therefore,
 intreats
 that Edward may be buried
 with the established Protestant
 forms.

It was, in consequence, with no light anxiety that Renard learnt from Mary her intention of commencing her reign with an act which was so far at variance with the Emperor's advice, and which would at once display the colours of a party. To give the king a public funeral with a ceremonial forbidden by the law, would be a strain of the prerogative which could not fail to create jealousy
 even among those to whom the difference between a Latin mass and an English service was not absolutely vital; and the judicious latitudinarianism
 to which the lay statesmen of the better sort were inclining, would make them dread the appearance
 of a disposition that would encourage the revolutionists. She owed her crown to the Protestants as well as to the Catholics. If she broke the law to please the prejudices of the latter, Renard was warned that her present popularity would not be of long continuance.†

Yet, as the ambassador trembled to know, a carelessness of consequences and an obstinate

* Charles V. to Renard, July 22: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv.

† Elle sera odieuse, suspecte, et dangereuse.—Renard to the Emperor: Rolls House MSS.

perseverance in a course which she believed to be right were the principal features in Mary's character. He wrote to her while she was still at Framlingham, using every argument which ought, as he considered, to prevail. He reminded her of the long and unavailing struggle of the Emperor to bring back Germany out of heresy, where the obstinacy of the Romanists had been as mischievous to him as the fanaticism of the Lutherans. 'Her duty to God was of course the first thing to be considered; but at such a time prudence was a part of that duty. The Protestant heresies had taken a hold deep and powerful upon her subjects. In London alone there were fifteen thousand French, Flemish, and German refugees, most of them headstrong and ungovernable enthusiasts. The country dreaded any fresh convulsions, and her Majesty should remember that she had instructed him to tell the council that she was suspected unjustly, and had no thought of interfering with the existing settlement of the realm.'*

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.

July 21.

He implores her to be cautious, and to remember her promise.

With all his efforts, however, Renard could but bring the queen to consent to a few days' delay; and fearing that she would return to her purpose, he sent to the Emperor a copy of his letter, which he urged him to follow up. Charles on the 29th replied again, lauding the ambassador's caution, and suggesting an argument more likely to weigh with his cousin than the soundest considerations

She consents to delay, and Charles endorses Renard's arguments.

* Renard to Queen Mary, copy enclosed to Charles V.: Rolls House MSS.

CH. 30. of public policy. Edward had lived and died in A.D. 1553. heresy, and the Catholic services were intended July. 29. only for the faithful sons of the Church.* He desired Renard to remind her that those who had been her most valuable friends were known Charles to hold opinions far from orthodox; and he once tells her to call a free parliament, and be guided by its advice; She had asked whether she should imitate Northumberland and nominate the members of the House of Commons. He cautioned her against so dangerous an example; he advised her to let the counties and towns send deputies of their own choice; and if the writs were sent into Cornwall and the northern counties which had remained most constant to the Catholic religion,
 these places might be expected to return persons who would support her own sentiments.†

If the Emperor had been equally earnest in urging Mary to consult the wishes of her subjects on her marriage, he would have been a truer friend to her than he proved to be. But

* Vous avez tres bien faict de desconseillier à la dicte Royné
 qu'elle fist les obseques du feu
 Roy, ce qu'elle peult tant plus delaisser avecque la repos de sa conscience, puisque comme escri-
 pvez il est decedé soustenant jusques à la fin, selon qu'il avoit
 esté persuadé de depuis sa jeunesse, les opinions de des-voyez de nostre ancienne religion : par ou l'on ne peult sans scrupule luy faire l'enterrement
 et obsèques accoustumez en nostre dicte religion. Et est

bien que l'ayez persuadé par
 vostre dicte lettre à la dicte dilation.—Charles V. to Renard.
 July 29: Granvelle Papers,
 vol. iv.

† Et il seroit a esperer que
 y appellant ceulx du Noort et de Cornuailles avec les autres comme
 ce sont ceulx qui sont demeurez
 plus ferme en la religion, et qui ont démonstre plus d'affection
 en son endroit qu'elle trouveroit
 envers iceulx pour tout ce qu'elle
 voudroit ordonner plus de faveur.
 —Ibid.

prudential arguments produced no effect on the eager queen; Renard had warned her not to resist Northumberland; she had acted on her own judgment, and Northumberland was a prisoner, and she was on the throne. By her own will she was confident that she could equally well restore the mass, and in good time the Pope's authority. The religious objection to the funeral was more telling, and on this point she hesitated. Meantime she began to move slowly towards London, and at the end of the month she reached her old house of Newhall in Essex, where she rested till the preparations were complete for her entry into London.

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.

July.

But Mary is confident in her own judgment.

The first point on which she had now to make up her mind concerned the persons with whom she was to carry on the government. The Emperor was again clear in his advice, which here she found herself obliged to follow. She was forced to leave undisturbed in their authorities such of her brother's late ministers as had contributed to the revolution in her favour. Derby, Sussex, Bath, Oxford, who had hurried to her support at Framlingham, were her loyal subjects, whom she could afford to neglect, because she could depend upon their fidelity. Pembroke and Winchester, Arundel and Shrewsbury, Bedford, Cobham, Cheyne, Petre, too powerful to affront, too uncertain to be trusted as subjects, she could only attach to herself by maintaining in their offices and emoluments. She would restore the Duke of Norfolk to the council; Gardiner should hold office again; and she could rely on the good faith of Paget, the ablest, as well as the

The Emperor recommends her to retain the services of most of Edward's council;

And with this advice she is forced reluctantly to comply.

CH. 30. most honest, of all the professional statesmen.
 A.D. 1553. But Norfolk was old, and the latitudinarian July. Paget and the bigoted Gardiner bore each other no good will; so that, when the queen had leisure
 to contemplate her position, it did not promise to be an easy one. She would have to govern with the assistance of men who were gorged with the spoils of the Church, suspected of heresy, and at best indifferent to religion.

Gardiner
 rejoins the council,
 and creates
 alarm.

In Mary's absence, the Lords in London carried on the government as they could on their own responsibility. On the 21st Courtenay was released from the Tower. Gardiner was offered liberty, but he waited to accept it from the queen's own hand. He rejoined the council, however, and on the first or second day of his return to the board,
 he agitated their deliberations by requiring the restoration of his house in Southwark, which had been appropriated to the Marquis of Northampton, and by reminding Pembroke that he was in possession of estates which had been stolen from the see of Winchester.

July 25.
 Northum-
 berland is brought into London, and committed
 to the Tower.

On the 25th Northumberland and Lord Ambrose Dudley were brought in from Cambridge, escorted by Grey and Arundel, with four hundred of the guard. Detachments of troops were posted all along the streets from Bishopsgate where the duke would enter, to the Tower, to prevent the mob from tearing him in pieces. It was but twelve days since he had ridden out from that gate
 in the splendour of his power; he was now assailed
 from all sides with yells and execrations; bareheaded, with cap in hand, he bowed to the crowd

as he rode on, as if to win some compassion from them; but so recent a humility could find no favour. His scarlet cloak was plucked from his back; the only sounds which greeted his ears were, 'Traitor, traitor, death to the traitor!' He hid his face, sick at heart with shame, and Lord Ambrose, at the gate of the Tower, was seen to burst into tears.* Edwin Sandys, Northampton, Ridley, Lord Robert Dudley, the offending judges Cholmley and Montague, with many others, followed in the few next days. Montague had protested to the queen that he had acted only under compulsion, but his excuses were not fully received. Lady Northumberland went to Newhall to beg for mercy for her sons, but Mary refused to admit her.†

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
July.

His sons, Bishop Ridley, and others, are imprisoned also.

In general, however, there was no desire to press hard upon the prisoners. Few had been guilty in the first degree; in the second degree so many were guilty, that all could not be punished, and to make exceptions would be unjust and invidious. The Emperor recommended a general pardon, from which the principal offenders only should be excluded, and Mary herself was as little inclined to harshness. Her present desire was to forget all that had past, and take possession of her power for the objects nearest to her heart. Her chief embarrassment for the moment was from the overloyalty of her subjects. The old-fashioned lords and country gentlemen who had attended

The Emperor advises a general pardon, excepting only from it the chief offenders. Mary herself is inclined to mercy.

* Renard to Charles V.: Rolls House MSS. BAOARDO. Grey Friars' Chronicle.

† Renard to Charles V.: Rolls House MSS.

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
July.

her with their retainers from Norfolk, remained encamped round Newhall, unable to persuade themselves that they could leave her with safety in the midst of the men who had been the ministers of the usurpation.*

She is still perplexed about her brother's funeral.

She insists that she will restore the mass, and will not recognise the changes made in the minority.

Her closest confidence the queen reserved for Renard. On the 28th of July she sent for him at midnight. On the 2nd of August he was again with her, and the chief subject of her thoughts was still the funeral. 'She could not have her brother committed to the ground like a dog,' she said. While her fortunes were uncertain, she had allowed Renard to promise for her that she would make no changes in religion, but 'she had now told the Lords distinctly that she would not recognise any of the laws which had been passed in the minority,† and she intended to act boldly; timidity would only encourage the people to be insolent;' 'the Lords were all quarrelling among themselves, and accusing one another; she could not learn the truth on any point of the late conspiracy; she did not know who were guilty or who were innocent; and, amidst the distracted advices which were urged upon her, she could not tell whether she

* Renard to Charles V.: Rolls House MSS.

† She, perhaps, imagined that she was not exceeding her statutable right in the refusal. The 17th of the 28th of Henry VIII. empowered any one of the heirs to the crown named in the king's will, on arriving at the age of twenty-four, to repeal laws passed, not only in his or her own minority; but under circumstances such as those which had actually occurred, where the first heir had died before coming of age. The 11th of the 1st of Edward VI. modified the act of Henry, limiting the power of repeal to the sovereign in whose own reign the law to be repealed had been passed. But this act of Edward's was, itself, passed in a minority, and Mary might urge that she might repeal that as well as any other statute passed in his reign, in virtue of the act of her father.

could safely venture to London or not; but outward acquiescence in the course which she chose to follow she believed that she could compel, and she would govern as God should direct her. The Emperor, she added, had written to her about her marriage, not specifying any particular person, but desiring her to think upon the subject. She had never desired to marry while princess, nor did she desire it now; but if it were for the interests of the Church, she would do whatever he might advise.'

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
August 2.

On this last point Renard knew more of the Emperor's intentions than Mary, and was discreetly silent; on other points he used his influence wisely. He constrained her, with Charles's arguments, to relinquish her burial scheme. 'Edward, as a heretic, should have a heretic funeral at Westminster Abbey; she need not be present, and might herself have a mass said for him in the Tower. As to removing to London, in his opinion she had better go thither at once, take possession of her throne, and send Northumberland to trial. Her brother's body ought to be examined also, that it might be ascertained whether he had been poisoned; and, if poisoned, by whom, and for what purpose.'*

Renard
persuades
her that Edward,
having been a heretic,
may not be buried as a Catholic.

Mary rarely paused upon a resolution. Making up her mind that, as Renard said, it would be better for her to go to London, she set out thither the following day, Thursday, the 3rd of August. Excitement lent to her hard features

* Renard to Charles V.: Rolls House MSS.

CH. 30. an expression almost of beauty,* as she rode in the midst of a splendid cavalcade of knights and nobles. Elizabeth, escorted by two thousand horse and a retinue of ladies, was waiting to receive her outside the gates. The first in her congratulations, after the proclamation, yet fearful of giving offence, Elizabeth had written to ask if it was the queen's pleasure that she should appear in mourning; but the queen would have no mourning, nor would have others wear it in her presence. The sombre colours which of late years had clouded the court, were to be banished at once and for ever; and with the dark colours, it seemed for a time as if old dislikes and suspicions were at the same time to pass away. The sisters embraced; the queen was warm and affectionate, kissing all the ladies in Elizabeth's train; and side by side the daughters of Henry VIII. rode through Aldgate at seven in the evening, amidst the shouts of the people, the thunder of cannon, and pealing of church bells.†

At the Tower gates the old Duke of Norfolk, Gardiner, Courtenay, and the Duchess of Somerset were seen kneeling as Mary approached. 'These are my prisoners,' she said, as she alighted from her horse, and stooped and kissed them. Charmed by the enthusiastic reception and by the pleasant disappointment of her anxieties, she could find no room for hard thoughts of any one; so far was she softened, Renard wrote, that she could hardly be brought to consent to the necessary execution

A.D. 1553.
August 3.
The queen
enters London, and rides with her sister
to the Tower,

Where the Duke of Norfolk,
Gardiner,
and the Duchess of Somerset
receive her
kneeling.

* 'La beauté de visage plus que mediocre,' are Renard's words to Charles.

† RENARD; NOAILLES; MACHYN; Grey Friars' Chronicle.

of justice. Against Northumberland himself she had no feeling of vindictiveness, and was chiefly anxious that he should be attended by a confessor; Northampton was certainly to be pardoned; Suffolk was already free; Northumberland should be pardoned, if possible; and, as to Lady Jane, justice forbade, she said, that an innocent girl should suffer for the crimes of others.*

CH. 30.
A.D. 1553.
August 3.
The queen, delighted with her reception, desires to pardon every one.

The Emperor had recommended mercy; but he had not advised a general indemnity, as Renard made haste to urge. The Imperialist conception of clemency differed from the queen's; and the same timidity which had first made the ambassadors too prudent, now took the form of measured cruelty. Renard entreated that Lady Jane should not be spared; 'conspirators required to be taught that for the principals in treason there was but one punishment; the duke must die, and the rival queen and her husband must die with him.' 'We set before her'—Renard's own hand is the witness against him—'the examples of Maximus and his son Victor, both executed by the Emperor Theodosius; Maximus, because he had usurped the purple; Victor, because, as the intended heir of his father, he might have been an occasion of danger had he lived.†

Renard insists that Lady Jane and her husband must die as well as Northumberland.

* Renard to Charles V.: Rolls House MSS.

† Et luy fust proposé l'exemple de Maximus et Victor son filz que Theodose l'Empereur feit mourir pour s'estre attribué le nom d'Empereur par tyrannie l'avoir voulu continuer en son dict filz Victor, escripvant l'histoire que l'on feit mourir le filz pour le scandale et danger qu'en eust peu advenir.—Renard to Charles V.: Rolls House MSS. For the story, see GIBBON, cap. xxvii.

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.

August.
Renard is jealous of Elizabeth
also,

Looking also, as Renard was already doing, on the scenes which were round him, chiefly or solely as they might affect the interests of his master's son, he had been nervously struck by the entourage which surrounded Elizabeth, and the popularity which she, as well as the queen, was evidently enjoying.

Elizabeth, now passing into womanhood, was the person to whom the affections of the liberal party in England most definitely tended. She was the heir-presumptive to the crown; in matters of religion she was opposed to the mass, and opposed as decidedly to factious and dogmatic Protestantism; while from the caution with which she had kept aloof from political entanglements, it was clear that her brilliant intellectual abilities were not her only or her most formidable gifts. Already she shared the favour of the people with her sister. Let Mary offend them (and in the intended marriage offence would unquestionably have to be given), their entire hearts might be transferred to her. The public finger had pointed to Courtenay as the husband which England desired for the queen. When Courtenay should be set aside by Mary, he might be accepted by Elizabeth; and Elizabeth, it was rumoured, looked upon him with an eye of favour.* On all accounts, therefore, Elizabeth was dangerous. She was a figure on the stage whom Renard would gladly see removed; and a week or two later he bid

And warns
the queen
against her.

* Renard to Charles V.: Rolls House MSS.

Mary look to her, watch her, catch her tripping, if good fortune would so permit; 'it was better to prevent than to be prevented.'*

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
August.

The queen did not close her ears to these evil whispers; but for the first few days after she came to the Tower her thoughts were chiefly occupied with religion, and her first active step was to release and restore to their sees the deprived and imprisoned bishops. The first week in August Ponet, by royal order, was ejected from Winchester, Ridley from London, and Scory from Chichester. The see of Durham was reconstituted. Tunstal, Day, and Heath were set at liberty, and returned to their dioceses. The Bishop of Ely was deposed from the chancellorship, and the seals were given to Gardiner. 'On the 5th of August,' says the Grey Friars' Chronicle, 'at seven o'clock at night, Edmond Bonner came home from the Marshalsea like a bishop, and all the people by the wayside bade him welcome home, both man and woman, and as many of the

The queen restores the deprived bishops.

* Signantment sembleroit que vostre majesté ne se deust confier en Madame Elizabeth que bien a point, et découvrir sur ce qu'elle ne se voit en espoir d'entrer en règne, ne avoir voulu fleschir quant au point de la religion ny ouyr la messe; ce que l'on jugeoit elle deust faire pour le respect de vostre majesté, et pour les courtoysies dont elle use en son endroit encores qu'elle ny. eust faict sinon l'assister et l'accompagner. Et davantage l'on peult découvrir comme elle se maintient en la nouvelle religion par pratique, pour attirer et gagner a sa dévotion ceulx quilz sont de la dicte religion en s'en aider, si elle avoit intention de maligner; et jaois l'on se pourroit fourcompter quant à son intention, si est en ce commencement, qu'il est plus sure prévenir que d'estre prévenu et penser a ce que peult advenir; actendu que les objects sont evidens. — Les Ambassadeurs de l'Empereur à Marie, Reine d'Angleterre: Granvelle Papers, vol. ii. pp. 64-69.

CH. 30. women as might kissed him; and so he came to Paul's, and knelt on the steps, and said his prayers, and the people rang the bells for joy.*

A.D. 1553.
August.
The bells
of St.
Paul's are rung for Bonner.
The public accounts
are examined.

The queen
undertakes
to pay Edward's
debts.

While Mary was repairing acts of injustice, Gardiner, with Sir William Petre, was looking into the public accounts. The debts of the late government had been reduced, the currency un-considered, to 190,000*l*.† A doubt had been raised whether, after the attempt to set aside the succession, the queen was bound to take the responsibility of these obligations, but Mary preferred honour to convenience; she promised to pay everything as soon as possible. Further, there remain, partly in Gardiner's hand, a number of hasty notes, written evidently in these same first weeks of Mary's reign, which speak nobly for the intentions with which both Mary and himself were setting generally to work. The expenses of the household were to be reduced to the scale of Henry VII., or the early years of Henry VIII.; the garrisons at Berwick and Calais were to be placed on a more economical footing, the navy reduced, the irregular guard dismissed or diminished. Bribery was to be put an end to in the government forms

The new
generally
good intentions,

* Chronicle of the Grey Friars of London, p. 82.

† August, 1553. Debts of the crown. Irish debt, 36,094*l*. 18*s*. Household debts, 14,574*l*. 16*s*. Further household debts, 7450*l*. 5*s*. Berwick debt, with the wages of the officers, 16,639*l*. 18*s*. Calais debt, beside 17,000*l*. of loans and other things, 21,184*l*. 10*s*.

Ordnance Office, 3134*l*. 7*s*. Public works, 3200*l*. Admiralty debt, 3923*l*. 4*s*. Debts in the Office of the Chamber, 17,968*l*. Debts beyond the seas by Sir Thomas Gresham's particular bill, 61,068*l*. Alderney's debt, 3028*l*. Scilly debt, 3071*l*.—MS. Mary, Domestic, vol. i. State Paper Office.

courts of Westminster, at quarter sessions, and among justices of the peace; 'the laws were to be restored to their authority without suffering any matters to be ordered otherwise than as the laws should appoint.* These first essentials having been attended to, the famous or infamous book of sales, grants, and exchanges of the crown lands was to be looked into; the impropriation of benefices was to cease, and decency to be restored to the parish churches, where the grooms and game-keepers should give way to competent ministers; economy, order, justice, and reverence should heal the canker of profligate profanity which had eaten too long into the moral life of England.

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
August.

In happier times Mary might have been a worthy queen, and Gardiner an illustrious minister;† but

* Note of Things to be attended to: MS. Mary, Domestic, vol. i.

† Another natural feature of these curious days was the arrest of suspected persons; one of whom, Edward Underhill, the Hot Gospeller, has left behind him, in the account of his own adventures, a very vivid picture of the time. Underhill was a yeoman of the guard. He had seen service in the French wars, but had been noted chiefly for the zeal which he had shown in the late reign in hunting Catholics into gaol. He had thus worked his way into court favour. During the brief royalty of Jane Grey, his wife was confined. His child was christened at the Tower church, and Suffolk and Pembroke were 'gossips,' and Jane herself was godmother.

The day that Mary was proclaimed, he put out a ballad, which, as he expected, brought him into trouble. 'The next day,' he is telling his own story, 'after the queen was come to the Tower, the foresaid ballad came into the hands of Secretary Bourne, who straightway made inquiry for the said Edward, who dwelt in Lymehurst; which he having intelligence of, sent the sheriff of Middlesex with a company of bills and glaives, who came into my house, being in my bed, and my wife newly laid in childbed. The high constable, whose name is Thomas Joy, dwelled at the house next to me, whom the sheriff brought also with him. He being my very friend, desired the sheriff and his company to stay without for

CH. 30. the fatal superstition which confounded religion with orthodox opinion was too strong for both of them.

A.D. 1553.
August.
Which their intellectual misfortunes prevent them from executing.

frighting of my wife, and he would go fetch me unto him; who knocked at the door, saying, he must speak with me. I lying so near that I might hear him, called unto him, willing him to come unto me, for that he was always my very friend and earnest in the gospel, who declared unto me that the sheriff and a great company was sent for me. Whereupon I rose and made me ready to come unto him.'

'Sir, said he, I have commandment from the council to apprehend you and bring you unto them.

'Why, said I, it is now ten of the clock at night; you cannot now carry me unto them.

'No, sir, said he, you shall go with me to my house in London, where you shall have a bed, and to-morrow I will bring you unto them in the Tower.

'In the name of God, quoth I, and so went with him, requiring him if I might understand the cause. He said he knew none.'

Underhill, however, conjectured that it was the ballad. He 'was nothing dismayed;' and in the morning went readily to the Tower, where he waited in the presence chamber talking to the pensioners.

Sir Edward Hastings passed through, and as he saw him, 'frowned earnestly.' 'Are you come?' said Hastings: 'we will talk with you ere you part, I warrant you.' They were old acquaintances. Underhill had been controller of the ordnance at Calais when Lord Huntingdon was in command there. The earl being in bad health, his brother Sir Edward was with him, assisting in the duties of the office; and Underhill, being able to play and sing, had been a frequent visitor at the Government House. The earl, moreover, 'took great delight to hear him reason' with Sir Edward, on points of controversy—chiefly on the real presence—where the controller of the ordnance (according to his own account), would quote Scripture, and Sir Edward would 'swear great oaths,' 'especially by the Lord's foot;' on which Underhill would say, 'Nay, then, it must needs be so, and you prove it with such oaths;' and the earl would laugh and exclaim, 'Brother, give him over, Underhill is too good for you.'

Hastings, it seemed, could not forgive these passages of wit, and Underhill was to smart for them. While he stood waiting, Secretary Bourne came in, 'looking as the wolf at the lamb,' and seeing the man that he had sent for, carried him off into the council room. Hastings was gone; Bedford sat as President, and Bedford,' says Underhill, 'was my friend, for that my chance was to be at the recovery of his son, my Lord Russell, when he was cast into the Thames by Lymehurst, whom I received into my house, and Edward's body was meanwhile examined. The physicians reported that without doubt he had

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.

August.

Edward's body is examined by physicians,

gate him to bed, who was in great peril of his life, the weather being very cold.'

Bedford, however, made no sign of recognition. Bourne read the ballad ; on which Underhill protested that there was no attack on the queen's title in it. No ! Bourne said, but it maintains the queen's title with the help of an arrant heretic, Tyndal. Underhill used the word Papist. Sir John Mason asked what he meant by that : ' Sir,' he says that he replied, ' I think, if you look among the priests in Paul's, you shall find some old mumpsimusses there.

' Mumpsimusses, knave, said he, Mumpsimusses ! Thou art an heretic knave, by God's blood !

' Yea ! by the mass, said the Earl of Bath, I warrant him an heretic knave indeed.

' I beseech your honours,' Underhill said, ' speaking to the Lords that sate at the table (for those others stood by and were not of the council), be my good Lords. I have offended no laws. I have served the Queen's Majesty's father and brother long time, and spent and consumed my living therein. I went not forth against her Majesty, notwithstanding I was commanded.'

He was interrupted by Arundel, who said that, ' by his writing,' ' he wished to set them all by the ears.' Hastings re-entered at the moment, telling the council that they must repair to the queen, and the Hot Gospeller was promptly ordered to Newgate.

The sheriff led him through the streets, his friend Joy ' following afar off, as Peter followed Christ.' He wrote a few words to his wife at the door of Newgate, asking her to send him ' his nightgown, his Bible, and his lute ;' and then entered the prison, his life in which he goes on to describe.

In the centre of Newgate was ' a great open hall.' ' As soon as it was suppertime,' the board was covered in the same hall. The keeper, whose name was ' Alisander,' with his wife, came and sate down, ' and half a dozen prisoners that were there for felony,' Underhill ' being the first that for religion was sent unto that prison.' One of the felons had served with him in France. ' After supper,' the story continues, ' this good fellow, whose name was Bristow, procured me to have a bed in his chamber, who could play well upon a rebeck. He was a tall fellow, and after one of Queen Mary's guard ; yet a Protestant, which he kept secret, for else, he said, he should not have found such favour as he did at the keeper's hands and his wife's, for to such as loved the gospel they were very cruel. Well, said Underhill, I have sent for my Bible, and, by God's grace, therein shall be my daily exercise ; I will not hide it from them. Sir, said he, I am poor ; but they will bear with you, for they see your estate is to pay well ; and I will shew you the nature and manner of them ; for I have been here a

CH. 30. died of poison,* and there was a thought of indicting the Duke of Northumberland for his murder; but it was relinquished on further inquiry; the poison, if the physicians were right,
 must have been administered by negligence or accident. The corpse was then buried with the forms of the Church of England at Westminster Abbey; the Archbishop of Canterbury, who had so far been left at liberty, read the service; it was the last and saddest function of his public ministry which he was destined to perform. Simultaneously, as Mary had determined, requiems were chanted in the Tower chapel; and Gardiner, in the presence of the queen and four hundred persons, sung the mass for the dead with much solemnity. The ceremony was, however, injured by a misfortune; after the gospel the incense was carried round, and the chaplain who bore it was married:

A.D. 1553.
 August 6.

And buried
 with the forms of
 the Church
 of England.

Mass is
 said at the Tower.

good while. They both do love music very well. Wherefore you with your lute, and I to play with you on my rebeck, will please them greatly. He loveth to be merry, and to drink wine, and she also. If you will bestow upon them, every dinner and supper, a quart of wine and some music, you shall be their white son, and have all the favour they can shew you.'

The honour of being 'white son' to the governor and governess of Newgate was worth aspiring after. Underhill duly provided the desired entertainments. The governor gave him the best room in the prison, with all other admissible indulgences.

'At last,' however, 'the evil

savours, great unquietness, with over many drafts of air,' threw the poor gentleman into a burning ague. He shifted 'his lodgings,' but to no purpose; the 'evil savours' followed him. The keeper offered him his own parlour, where he escaped from the noise of the prison; but it was near the kitchen, and the smell of the meat was disagreeable. Finally, the wife put him away in her store-closet, amidst her best plate, crockery, and clothes, and there he continued to survive till the middle of September, when he was released on bail through the interference of the Earl of Bedford. — Underhill's Narrative: Harleian MSS. 425.

* Supra, Vol. V. p. 512.

Doctor Weston, who was afterwards deprived of the deanery of Windsor for adultery, darted forward and snatched the censer out of the chaplain's hand. 'Shamest thou not to do thine office,' he said, 'having a wife, as thou hast? The queen will not be censured by such as thou.'* Nor was scandal the worst part of it. Elizabeth had been requested to attend, and had refused; angry murmurs and curses against the Bishop of Winchester were heard among the yeomen of the guard; while the queen made no secret of her desire that the example which she had set should be imitated. Renard trembled for the consequences; Noailles anticipated a civil war; twenty thousand men, the latter said, would lose their lives before England would be cured of heresy;† yet Mary had made a beginning, and as she had begun she was resolved that others should continue.

CH. 30.
A.D. 1553.
August 6.

The people murmur, but Mary intends to persevere.

In the Tower she felt her actions under restraint. She was still surrounded by thousands of armed men, the levies of Derby and Hastings, the retainers of Pembroke and Arundel and Bedford; the council were spies upon her actions; the sentinels at the gates were a check upon her visitors. She could receive no one whose business with her was not made public to the Lords, and whose reception they were not pleased to sanction; even Renard was for a time excluded from her, and in her anxiety to see him, she suggested that he might come to her in disguise.‡

She finds herself under restraint at the Tower.

* STEYER.

† NOAILLES, vol. ii. p. 111.

‡ Monseigneur, je n'ay sceu

trouver moien jusques à ceste heure de communiquer avec la royne, ce que je deliberois faire

CH. 30. Such a thraldom was irksome and inconvenient.

A.D. 1553.
August.

The council quarrel
among themselves.

She had broken the promise which Renard had been allowed to make for her about religion; she had been troubled, it is easy to believe, with remonstrances, to which she was not likely to have answered with temper; Pembroke absented himself from the presence; he was required to ~~retire~~ and to reduce the number of his followers; the quarrels which began while the queen was at New Hall broke out with worse violence than ever; Lord Derby complained to Renard that those who had saved her crown were treated with neglect, while men like Arundel, Bedford, and Pembroke, who had been parties to the treasons against her, remained in power; Lord Russell was soon after placed under arrest; Pembroke and Winchester were ordered to keep their houses, and the court was distracted with suspicion, discord, and uncertainty.*

return

A riot
breaks out
in London,
and Mary withdraws
to Richmond.

From such a scene Mary desired to escape to some place where she could be at least mistress of her own movements; her impatience was quickened by a riot at St. Bartholomew's, where a priest attempted to say mass; and on Saturday, the 12th of August, she removed to Richmond. Her absence encouraged the insubordination of avec l'occasion des lectures de sa Majesté, si sans suspicion, j'eusse peu avoir accès, que n'a esté possible pour estre les portes en la Tour de Londres où elle este logée, si gardées que n'est possible y entrer que l'on ne soit congneu: elle m'avoit faict dire si je me pouvoys desguiser et prendre ung manteau, mais il m'a semblé pour le mieux et plus seur d'attendre qu'elle soit a Richemont.—Renard to Charles V.: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv. pp. 71, 72.

* Renard to the Emperor: Rolls House MSS. Queen Jane and Queen Mary, p. 15.

the people. On Sunday, the 13th, another priest was attacked at the altar; the vestments were torn from his back, and the chalice snatched from his hands. Bourne, whom the queen had appointed her chaplain, preached at Paul's Cross. A crowd of refugees and English fanatics had collected round the pulpit; and when he spoke something in praise of Bonner, and said that he had been unjustly imprisoned,* yells rose of 'Papist, Papist! Tear him down!' a dagger was hurled at the preacher, swords were drawn; the mayor attempted to interfere, but he could not make his way through the dense mass of the rioters; and Bourne would have paid for his rashness with his life, had not Courtenay, who was a popular favourite, with his mother, the Marchioness of Exeter, thrown themselves on the pulpit steps, while Bradford sprung to his side, and kept the people back till he could be carried off.

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
August 13.

A Catholic sermon is preached at Paul's Cross; a tumult ensues,

But the danger did not end there. The Protestant orators sounded the alarm through London. Meetings were held, and inflammatory placards were scattered about the streets. If religion was to be tampered with, men were heard to say, it was better at once to fetch Northumberland from the Tower.

And the people talk of releasing Northumberland.

Uncertain on whom she could rely, Mary sent for Renard, who could only repeat his former cautions, and appeal to what had occurred in justification of them. He undertook to pacify

* Renard says it was at these words that the exasperation broke out.

CH. 30. Lord Derby; but in the necessity to which she was so soon reduced of appealing to him, a foreigner, in her emergencies, he made her feel that she could not carry things with so high a hand. She had a rival in the Queen of Scots, beyond her domestic enemies, whom her wisdom
 ought to fear; she would ruin herself if she flew in the face of her subjects; and he prevailed so far with her that she promised to take no further steps till the meeting of parliament. After a consultation with the mayor, she drew up a hasty proclamation, granting universal toleration
 till further orders, forbidding her Protestant and Catholic subjects to interrupt each other's services, and prohibiting at the same time all preaching on either side without license from herself.

A.D. 1553.
 August 16.

Renard
 persuades
 the queen
 to be more cautious.

The marriage question is again
 opened.

Being on the spot, the ambassador took the opportunity of again trying Mary's disposition upon the marriage question. His hopes had waned since her arrival in London; he had spoken to Paget, who agreed that an alliance with the Prince of Spain was the most splendid which the queen could hope for; but the time
 was inopportune, and the people were intensely hostile. The exigencies of the position, he thought, might oblige the queen to yield to wishes which
 she could not oppose, and accept Lord Courtenay;
 or possibly her own inclination might set in the same direction; or, again, she might wish to renew
 her early engagement with the Emperor himself.
 The same uncertainty had been felt at Brussels;
 the Bishop of Arras, therefore, had charged Renard to feel his way carefully and make no

blunder. If the queen inclined to the Emperor, he might speak of Philip as more eligible; if she fancied Courtenay, it would be useless to interfere—she would only resent his opposition.* Renard obeyed his instructions, and the result was reassuring. When the ambassador mentioned the word 'marriage,' the queen began to smile significantly, not once, but many times; she plainly liked the topic: plainly, also, her thoughts were not turning in the direction of any English husband; she spoke of her rank, and of her unwillingness to condescend to a subject; Courtenay, the sole remaining representative of the White Rose except the Poles, was the only Englishman who could in any way be thought suitable for her; but she said that she expected the Emperor to provide a consort for her, and that, being a woman, she could not make the first advances. Renard satisfied himself from her manner that, if the Prince of Spain was proposed, the offer would be most entirely welcome.†

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.

August 16.

The queen shows that she has no thoughts of Courtenay, and will have Philip, if the Emperor wishes.

The trials of the conspirators were now resolved upon. The queen was determined to spare Lady Jane Grey, in spite of all which Renard could urge; but the state of London showed that the punishment of the really guilty could no longer be safely delayed. On this point all parties in the council were agreed. On Friday, the 18th of August, therefore, a court of peers was formed

* Car si elle y avoit fantesie, elle ne laisseroit, si elle este du naturel des autres femmes, de passer oultre, et si se ressentiroit à jamais de ce que vous en pourriez avoir dit. — Arras to Renard: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv. p. 77.

† Renard to the Bishop of Arras: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv. p. 79. Renard to Charles V., August 16: Rolls House MSS.

CH. 30. in Westminster Hall, with the aged Duke of Norfolk for High Steward, to try John Dudley Duke of Northumberland, the Earl of Warwick, and the Marquis of Northampton for high treason. Forty-four years before, as the curious remarked, the father of Norfolk had sat on the commission which tried the father of Northumberland for the same crime.

A.D. 1553.
August 16.
The Duke of Northumberland, Lord Warwick, and the Marquis of Northampton are brought to trial.

Northumberland pleads guilty, but raises points in his defence which are not allowed.

The indictments charged the prisoners with levying war against their lawful sovereign. Northumberland, who was called first to the bar, pleaded guilty of the acts which were laid against him, but he submitted two points to the consideration of the court.

1. Whether, having taken the field with a warrant under the Great Seal, he could be lawfully accused of treason.

2. Whether those peers from whom he had received his commission, and by whose letters he had been directed in what he had done, could sit upon his trial as his judges.

The Great Seal, he was answered briefly, was the seal of a usurper, and could convey no warrant to him. If the Lords were as guilty as he said, yet, 'so long as no attainder was on record against them, they were persons able in law to pass upon any trial, and not to be challenged but at the prince's pleasure.'*

The duke bowed and was silent.

* Queen Jane and Queen Mary. The anomaly in the constitution of the court amused to the Emperor, as an illustration of England and the English character.—Rolls House MSS. Renard, who commented upon it

Northampton and Warwick came next, and, like Northumberland, confessed to the indictment. Northampton, however, pleaded, in his defence, that he had held no public office during the crisis; that he had not been present at the making of Edward's device, and had been amusing himself hunting in the country.* Warwick, with proud sadness, said merely, that he had followed his father, and would share his father's fortunes; if his property was confiscated, he hoped that his debts would be paid.†

But Northampton had indisputably been in the field with the army, and, as his judges perfectly well knew, had been, with Suffolk, the duke's uniform supporter in his most extreme measures; the queen had resolved to pardon him; but the court could not recognise his excuse. Norfolk rose, in a few words pronounced the usual sentence, and broke his wand; the cold glimmering edge of the Tower axe was turned towards the prisoners, and the peers rose. Northumberland, before he was led away, fell upon his knees; his children were young, he said, and had acted under orders from himself; to them let the queen show mercy; for himself he had his peace to make with Heaven; he entreated for a few days of life, and the assistance of a confessor; if two of the council would come to confer with him, he had important

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
August 18.

Northumberland, Northampton, and Warwick are sentenced to die.

* Renard to Charles V.: Rolls House MSS. Queen Jane and Queen Mary, Appendix. Baccardo says, Northampton pleaded—Ch'egli non si era mai messo in governo et che sempre attese alla caccia.
† Ibid.

CH. 30. secrets of state to communicate; and, finally, he begged that he might die by the axe like a noble-
 A.D. 1553.
 August 19. man.*

Four other prisoners
 are tried,
 and also sentenced.

On the 19th, Sir John and Sir Henry Gates, Sir Andrew Dudley, and Sir Thomas Palmer were tried before a special commission. Dudley had gone with the treasonable message to France; the three others were the boldest and most unscrupulous of the duke's partisans, while Palmer was also especially hated for his share in the death of Somerset. These four also pleaded guilty, and were sentenced, Palmer only scornfully telling the commissioners that they were traitors as well as he, and worse than he.†

Three out
 of the seven condemned are to be executed.

Seven had been condemned; three only, the duke, Sir John Gates, and Palmer, were to suffer.

Crime alone makes death terrible; in the long list of victims whose bloody end, at stake or scaffold, the historian of England in the sixteenth century has to relate, two only showed signs of cowardice, and one of those was a soldier and a nobleman, who, in a moment of extreme peril, four years before, had kissed swords with his comrades, and had sworn to conquer the insurgents at Norwich, or die with honour.

The Duke of Northumberland, who since that time had lived very emphatically without God

* Queen Jane and Queen Mary, p. 17. Renard says that he asked the council to intercede for his life.

† So Renard states. The author of the Chronicle of Queen Mary says merely that he denied that he had borne arms against the queen, but admitted that he had been with the army.

in the world, had not lived without religion. CH. 30.
 He had affected religion, talked about religion, A.D. 1553.
 played with religion, till fools and flatterers had August 19.
 told him that he was a saint; and now, in his extreme need, he found that he had trifled with forms and words, till they had grown into a hideous hypocrisy. The Infinite of death was opening at his feet, and he had no faith, no hope,
 no conviction, but only a blank and awful horror,
 and perhaps he felt that there was nothing left for him but to fling himself back in agony into the open arms of superstition. He had asked to speak with some member of the council; he had asked for a confessor. In Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester, he found both.

After the sentence Gardiner visited him in Northum-
 the Tower, where he poured out his miserable berland, in story; he was a Catholic, he said, he always an inter-had been a Catholic; he had believed nothing view with of all the doctrines for which he had pretended Gardiner, protests to be so zealous under Edward. 'Alas!' he cried, that he has
 'is there no help for me?' 'Let me live but a always little longer to do penance for my many sins.' been a Gardiner's heart was softened at the humiliating Catholic, spectacle; he would speak to the queen, he said, and begs
 and he did speak, not wholly without success; for life.
 he may have judged rightly, that the living Gardiner
 penitence of the Joshua of the Protestants would intercedes have been more useful to the Church than his for him death.* Already Mary had expressed a wish with some effect;

* The authority for this story | was present at the interview.
 is Parsons the Jesuit, who learnt | Parsons says, indeed, that Mary
 it from one of the council who | would have spared the duke; but

CH. 30. that, if possible, the wretched man should be spared; and he would have been allowed to live, except for the reiterated protests of Renard in his own name and in the Emperor's.

A.D. 1553.
August 19.

But his death is at last resolved on.

It was decided at last that he should die; and a priest was assigned him to prepare his soul. Doctor Watts or Watson, the same man whom Cranmer long ago had set in the stocks at Canterbury, took charge of Palmer and the rest—to them, as rough soldiers, spiritual consolation from a priest of any decent creed was welcome.

The executions were fixed originally for Monday, the 21st; but the duke's conversion was a triumph to the Catholic cause too important not to be dwelt upon a little longer. Neither Northampton, Warwick, Andrew Dudley, or Sir Henry Gates were aware that they were to be respited, and, as all alike availed themselves of the services of a confessor and the forms of the Catholic faith, their compliance could be made an instrument of a public and edifying lesson. The lives of those who were to suffer were prolonged for twenty-four hours. On Monday morning 'certain of the citizens of London' were requested to be in attendance at the Tower chapel, where Northumberland, Northampton, Dudley, Henry Gates, and Palmer were brought in; and, 'first kneeling

Northum-
berland,
with the other prisoners,
hears mass
in the Tower.

that some one wrote to the Emperor, and that the Emperor insisted that he should be put to death. This could not be, because there was no time for letters to pass and repass between Brussels and London, in the interval between the sentence and the execution; but Renard says distinctly that Mary did desire to pardon him, and that he was himself obliged to exert his influence to prevent it.

down, every one of them, upon his knees, they heard mass, saying devoutly, with the bishop,* every one of them, Confiteor.' CH. 30.
A.D. 1553.
August 21.

'After the mass was done, the duke rose up, and looked back upon my lord marquis, and came unto him, asking them all forgiveness, the one after the other, upon their knees, one to another; and the one did heartily forgive the other. And then they came, every one of them, before the altar, every one of them kneeling, and confessing to the bishop that they were the same men in the faith according as they had confessed to him before, and that they all would die in the Catholic faith.' When they had all received the sacrament, they rose and turned to the people, and the duke said:—

'Truly, good people, I profess here before you all, that I have received the sacrament according to the true Catholic faith: and the plague that is upon the realm and upon us now is that we have erred from the faith these sixteen years; and this I protest unto you all from the bottom of my heart.'

They make public profession of the Catholic faith,

Northampton, with the rest, 'did affirm the same with weeping tears.' †

Among the spectators were observed the sons of the Duke of Somerset.

In exhibiting to the world the humiliation of the professors of the gospel, the Catholic party enjoyed a pardonable triumph. Northumberland,

And the duke again prays for mercy.

* GARDINER.

† Harleian MSS. 284. Compare the account of the chronicler. Queen Jane and Queen Mary, pp. 18, 19.

CH. 30. in playing a part in the pageant, was hoping to
 A.D. 1553. save his wretched life. When it was over he August 22. wrote a passionate appeal to Arundel.

He prays
 for life,
 though but the life of a dog; but he prays in vain.

‘Alas, my lord,’ he said, ‘is my crime so heinous as no redemption but my blood can wash away the spots thereof? An old proverb there is, and that most true—A living dog is better than a dead lion; oh that it would please her good Grace to give me life, yea, the life of a dog, if I might but live and kiss her feet, and spend both life and all in her honourable service.’

But Arundel could not save him—would not have saved him, perhaps, had he been able—and he had only to face the end with such resolution as he could command.

The next morning, at nine o’clock, Warwick and Sir John Gates heard mass in the Tower chapel; the two Seymours were again present with Courtenay; and before Gates received the sacrament, he said a few words of regret to the latter for his long imprisonment, of which he admitted himself in part the cause.* On leaving the chapel Warwick was taken back to his room, and learned that he was respited. Gates joined Palmer, who was walking with Watson in the garden, and talking with the groups of gentlemen who were collected there. Immediately after, the duke was brought out. ‘Sir John,’ he said to Gates, ‘God have mercy on us; forgive me as I forgive you, although you and your counrespited.

Warwick is

* ‘Not for any hatred towards you,’ he added, ‘but for fear that harm might come thereby to my late young master.’—Queen Jane and Queen Mary, p. 20.

cil have brought us hither.' 'I forgive you, my Lord,' Gates answered, 'as I would be forgiven; yet it was you and your authority that was the only original cause of all.' They bowed each. The duke passed on, and the procession moved forward to Tower-hill.

CH. 30.
A.D. 1553.
August 22.
The duke,
Sir John
Gates, and
Sir Thomas
Palmer,
are led to Tower-hill.

The last words of a worthless man are in themselves of little moment; but the effect of the dying speech of Northumberland lends to it an artificial importance. Whether to the latest moment he hoped for his life, or whether, divided between atheism and superstition, he thought, if any religion was true, Romanism was true, and it was prudent not to throw away a chance, who can tell? At all events, he mounted the scaffold with Heath, the Bishop of Worcester, at his side; and then deliberately said to the crowd, that his rebellion and his present fall were owing to the false preachers who had led him to err from the Catholic faith of Christ; the fathers and the saints had ever agreed in one doctrine; the present generation were the first that had dared to follow their private opinions; and in England and in Germany, where error had taken deepest root, there had followed war, famine, rebellion, misery, tokens all of them of God's displeasure. Therefore, as they loved their country, as they valued their souls, he implored his hearers to turn, all of them, and turn at once, to the Church which they had left; in which Church he, from the bottom of his heart, avowed his own steadfast belief. For himself he called them all to witness that he died in the one true Catholic faith; to

The duke,
on the scaffold, tells
the people
that the change of religion has caused the misery of
the country,

And he implores them
to return
to the faith
of their fathers.

СН. 30. which, if he had been brought sooner, he would not have been in his present calamity.

A.D. 1553.
August 22.

He then knelt; 'I beseech you all,' he said again, 'to believe that I die in the Catholic faith.' He repeated the Miserere psalm, the psalm De Profundis, and the Paternoster. The executioner, as usual, begged his pardon. 'I have deserved a thousand deaths,' he muttered. He made the sign of the cross upon the sawdust, and kissed it, then laid down his head, and perished.

The effect
of his apos-tacy.

The shame of the apostacy shook down the frail edifice of the Protestant constitution, to be raised again in suffering, as the first foundations of it had been laid, by purer hands and nobler spirits.* In his better years Northum-

* Lady Jane Grey spoke a few memorable words on the duke's conduct at the scaffold. 'On Tuesday, the 29th of August,' says the writer of the Chronicle of Queen Mary, 'I dined at Partridge's house (in the Tower) with my Lady Jane, she sitting at the board's-end, Partridge, his wife, and my Lady's gentlewoman. We fell in discourse of religion. I pray you, quoth she, have they mass in London. Yea, forsooth, quoth I, in some places. It may so be, quoth she. It is not so strange as the sudden conversion of the late duke; for who could have thought, said she, he would have so done? It was answered her, perchance he thereby hoped to have had his pardon. Pardon! quoth she, woe worth him! He hath brought me and our stock in most miserable calamity by his exceeding ambition; but for the answering that he hoped for life by his turning, though other men be of that opinion, I utterly am not. For what man is there living, I pray you, although he had been innocent, that would hope of life in that case, being in the field in person against the queen, as general, and after his taking so hated and evil spoken of by the Commons; and at his coming into prison, so wondered at as the like was never heard by any man's time. Who can judge that he should hope for pardon whose life was odious to all men? But what will ye more? Like as his life was wicked and full of dissimulation, so was his end thereafter. I pray God I view no friend of mine die so. Should I, who am young and in my few years, forsake my faith for berland had been a faithful subject and a fearless soldier, and, with a master's hand over him,

he might have lived with integrity, and died
with honour. Opportunity tempted his ambition
—ambition betrayed him into crime—and, given over to his lower nature, he climbed to the highest round of the political ladder, to fall and perish
like a craven. He was one of those many men who can follow worthily, yet cannot lead; and the virtue of the beginning was not less real than the ignominy of the end.

Gates was the second sufferer. He, too, spoke in the same key. He had been a great reader of Scripture, he said, but he had not read it to be edified, but to be seditious—to dispute, to interpret it after his private affection; to him,
therefore, the honey had been poison, and he warned all men how they followed his ill example; God's holy mysteries were no safe things to toy or play with. Gates, in dying, had three strokes of an axe;—'Whether,' says an eyewitness,* 'it was by his own request or no was doubtful'—remarkable words: as if the everlasting fate of the soul depended on its latest

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
August 22.

Gates
warns the people
against reading the Bible controver-sially.

the love of life? Nay, God forbid! Much more he should not,
whose fatal course, although he had lived his just number of years, could not have long continued. But life was sweet, it appeared; so he might have lived, you will say, he did not care how; indeed, the reason is good; for he that would have lived in chains to have had his life, by like would leave no other means unattempted. But God be merciful to us, for he saith,

whoso denyeth him before men,
he will not know him in his Father's kingdom.—Queen Jane and Queen Mary, p. 24.

* Harleian MSS. 284.

CH. 30. emotion, and repentance could be intensified by the conscious realization of death.

A.D. 1553.
August 22.

Last came Sir Thomas Palmer, in whom, to judge by his method of taking leave of life, there was some kind of nobleness. It was he who led the cavalry forlorn hope, at Haddington, when the supplies were thrown in for the garrison.

He leapt upon the scaffold, red with the blood of his companions. 'Good morning to you all, good people,' he said, looking round him with a smile; 'ye come hither to see me die, and to see what news I have; marry, I will tell you; I have seen more in yonder terrible place [he pointed towards the Tower] than ever I saw before throughout all the realms that ever I wandered in; for there I have seen God, I have seen the world, and I have seen myself; and when I beheld my life, I saw nothing but slime and clay, full of corruption; I saw the world nothing else but vanity, and all the pleasures and treasures thereof naught worth; I saw God omnipotent, his power infinite, his mercy incomprehensible; and when I saw this, I most humbly submitted myself unto him, beseeching him of mercy and pardon, and I trust he hath forgiven me; for he called me once or twice before, but I would not turn to him, but even now by this sharp kind of death he hath called me unto him. I trust the wings of his mercy shall spread over me and save me; and I do here confess, before you all, Christ to be the very Son of God the Father, born of the Virgin Mary, which came into the world to fulfil the law for us, and to

Sir Thomas
Palmer dies
penitent,
confessing
the common faith
of Catholics and Protestants.

bear our offences on his back, and suffered his passion for our redemption, by the which I trust to be saved.'

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
August 24.

Like his fellow-sufferers, Palmer then said a few prayers, asked the queen's forgiveness, knelt, and died.

Stunned by the apostacy on the scaffold of the man whom they had worshipped as a prophet, the ultra-faction among the Protestants became now powerless. The central multitude, whose belief was undefined, yielded to the apparent sentence of Heaven upon a cause weakened by unsuccessful treason, and disavowed in his death by its champion. Edward had died on the anniversary of the execution of More; God, men said, had visited his people, and 'the Virgin Mary' had been set upon the throne for their redemption.* Dr. Watson, on the 20th of August, preached at Paul's Cross under a guard of soldiers; on the 24th, two days after the scene on Tower Hill, so little was a guard necessary, that mass was said in St. Paul's Church in Latin, with matins and vespers. The crucifix was replaced in the roodloft, the high altar was re-decorated, the real presence was defended from the pulpit, and, except from the refugees, not a murmur was heard.† Catching this favourable opportunity, the queen charmed the country with the announcement that the second portion of the last subsidy granted by

The Protestant spirit is broken.

The Catholic preachers are no more disturbed.

The queen remits part of the last subsidy.

* Renard to Charles V.: Rolls House MSS.

† Ibid.

CH. 30.
 A.D. 1553.
 August.

The remaining
 prisoners
 are pardoned and promised pardon,

And Mary
 is again
 popular.

parliament should not be collected ; she gave her word that the currency at the earliest moment should be thoroughly restored ; while she gained credit on all sides for the very moderate vengeance with which she appeared to be contenting herself. Ridley only, Renard wrote, on the 9th of September, would now be executed ; the other prisoners were to be all pardoned. The enthusiasm was slightly abated, indeed, when it was announced that their forgiveness would not be wholly free. Montague and Bromley, on their release from the Tower, were fined 7000*l.* a-piece. Suffolk, Northampton, and other noblemen and gentlemen, as their estates would bear. But, to relieve the burdens of the people at the expense of those who had reaped the harvest of the late spoliations was, on the whole, a legitimate retribution ; the moneyed men were pleased with the recognition of Edward's debts, and provided a loan of 25,000 crowns for the present necessities of the government. London streets rang again with shouts of 'God save the Queen ;' and Mary recovered a fresh instalment of popularity to carry her a few steps further.*

The refugees were the first difficulty. They were too numerous to imprison ; and the most influential among them—men like Peter Martyr—having come to England on the invitation of the late government, it was neither just nor honourable to hand them over to their own sovereigns. But both Mary and her Flemish adviser were anxious to see them leave the country as quickly as possible. The Emperor recommended a general intimation to be given out, that criminals of all kinds taking refuge in England would be liable to seizure, offences against religion being neither specially mentioned nor specially excepted.* The foreign preachers were ordered to depart by proclamation; and Peter Martyr, who had left Oxford, and was staying with Cranmer at Lambeth, expecting an arrest, received, instead of it, a safe-conduct, of which he instantly availed himself. The movements of others were quickened with indirect menaces; while Gardiner told Renard, with much self-satisfaction, that a few messages desiring some of them to call upon him at his house had given them wings.†

* NOAILLES ; RENARD.

CH. 30.
A.D. 1553.
August.

The foreign preachers receive orders to leave the country.

Finding her measures no longer opposed, the queen refused next to recognise the legality of the marriage of the clergy. Married priests should either leave their wives or leave their benefices; and on the 29th of August, Gardiner, Bonner, Day, and Tunstal, late prisoners in the Tower, were appointed commissioners to examine into the conditions of their episcopal brethren. Convocation was about to meet, and must undergo a preliminary purification. Unhappy convocation! So lately the supreme legislative body in the country, it was now patched,

The queen will not recognise the marriage of the clergy.

* Renard to Queen Mary: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv. p. 65.

† Renard to Charles V., September 9: Rolls House MSS.

CH. 30.
 A.D. 1553.
 August.
 The bench
 of bishops
 is purified.

clipped, mended, repaired, or altered, as the secular government put on its alternate hues. The Protestant bishops had accepted their offices on Protestant terms—Quamdiu se bene gesserint, on their good behaviour; and, with the assistance of so pliant a clause, a swift clearance was effected. Barlow, to avoid expulsion, resigned Bath. Paul Bush retreated from Bristol. Hooper, ejected from Worcester by the restoration of Heath, was deprived of Gloucester for heresy and marriage, and, being a dangerous person, was committed on the 1st of September to the Fleet. Ferrars, of St. David's, left in prison by Northumberland for other pretended offences, was deprived on the same grounds, but remained in confinement. Bird, having a wife, was turned out of Chester; Archbishop Holgate out of York. Coverdale, Ridley, Scory, and Ponet had been already disposed of. The bench was wholesomely swept.*

* Some of the Protestant bishops (Cranmer, Hooper, Ridley, and Ferrars were admirable exceptions) had taken care of themselves in the seven years of plenty. At the time of the deposition of the Archbishop of York, an inventory was taken of the personal property which was then in his possession. He had 'five houses, three very well provided, two meetly well.' At his house at Battersea he had, of coined gold, 300*l.*; plate gilt and parcel gilt, 1600 oz. Mitre, gold, with two pendants set with very fine diamonds, sapphires, and balists, and other stones and pearls, weight 125 oz.; six great gold rings, with very fine sapphires, emeralds, diamonds, turquoises. 'At Cawood he had of money 900*l.*; mitres, 2. Plate gilt and parcel gilt, 770 oz.; broken cross of silver gilt, 46 oz.; two thousand five hundred sheep; two Turkey carpets, as big and as good as any subject had; a chest full of copes and vestments. Household stores: wheat, 200 quarters; malt, 500 quarters; oats, 60 quarters; wine, 5 or 6 tuns; fish and ling, 6 or 7 hundred; horses at Cawood, four or five score; harness and artillery sufficient for 7 score men.'—STREYER'S Cranmer, vol. i. p. 440.

The English Protestant preachers, seeing that CH. 30.
priests everywhere held themselves licensed ex
officio to speak as they pleased from the pulpit, A.D. 1553.
began themselves also, in many places, to disobey September.
the queen's proclamation. They were made im- Protestant mediately to feel their mistake, and were brought clergy are to London to the Tower, the Marshalsea, or the imprisoned.
Fleet, to the cells left vacant by their opponents.
Among the rest came one who had borne no share in the late misdoings, but had long foreseen the fate to which those doings would bring him and many more. When Latimer was sent for, he was Sept. 4.
at Stamford. Six hours' notice was given him of Latimer his intended arrest; and so obviously his escape has an op-
was desired, that the pursuivant who brought the portunity warrant left him to obey it at his leisure; his of escaping, orders, he said, were not to wait. But Latimer but he pre-had business in England. While the fanatics fers to re-who had provoked the catastrophe were slink- main,
ing across the Channel from its consequences,
Latimer determined to stay at home, and help to pay the debts which they had incurred. He went quietly to London, appeared before the council, where his 'demeanour' was what they were pleased to term 'seditious,*' and was com- And is sent mitted to the Tower. 'What, my friend,' he to the
said to a warder who was an old acquaintance Tower.
there, 'how do you? I am come to be your neighbour again.' Sir Thomas Palmer's rooms in the garden were assigned for his lodging. In the winter he was left without a fire, and, grow-

* Privy Council Register, MS. Mary.

CH. 30. ing infirm, he sent a message to the Lieutenant of the Tower to look better after him, or he should give him the slip yet.*

A.D. 1553.
 September.

And there was another besides Latimer who would not fly when the chance was left open to him. Archbishop Cranmer had continued at Lambeth unmolested, yet unpardoned; his conduct with respect to the letters patent had been more upright than the conduct of any other member of the council by whom they had been signed; and on this ground, therefore, an exception could not easily be made in his disfavour. But his friends had interceded vainly to obtain the queen's definite forgiveness for him; treason might be forgotten; the divorce of Catherine of Arragon could never be forgotten. So he waited on, watching the reaction gathering strength, and knowing well the point to which it tended. In the country the English service was set aside and the mass restored with but little disturbance. No force had been used or needed; the Catholic majorities among the parishioners had made the change for themselves. The archbishop's friends came to him for advice; he recommended them to go abroad: he was urged to go himself while there was time; he said, 'It would be in no ways fitting for him to go away, considering the post in which he was; and to show that he was not afraid to own all the changes that were by his means made in religion in the last reign.'† urges others to fly. He himself

Cranmer
 will not fly,

Neither was it fitting for him to sit by in

* FOXE.

† STYPE'S Cranmer.

silence. The world, misconstruing his inaction, CH. 30.
believed him false like Northumberland; the world reported that he had restored mass at Canterbury; the world professed to have ascertained that he had offered to sing a requiem at Edward's funeral. In the second week of September, therefore, he made a public offer, in the form of a letter to a friend, to defend the communion service, and all the alterations for which he was responsible, against any one who desired to impugn them; he answered the stories against himself with a calm denial; and, though the letter was not printed, copies in manuscript were circulated through London so numerously that the press, said Renard, would not have sent out more.*

A. D. 1553.
September.
Nor will he look on with silence at the restoration
of the mass.

He undertakes the open defence of
the communion
service.

* Renard to Charles V. : Rolls House MSS. In these late times, when men whose temper has not been tried by danger, feel themselves entitled,
nevertheless, by their own innocence of large errors, to sit in judgment on the greatest of their forefathers, Cranmer has received no tender treatment. Because,
in the near prospect of a death of agony, his heart for a moment
failed him, the passing weakness
has been accepted as the key to his life, and he has been railed
at as a coward and a sycophant.
Considering the position of the writer, and the circumstances
under which it was issued, I regard the publication of this letter as one of the bravest actions ever deliberately ventured by man.

Let it be read, and speak for itself.

'As the devil, Christ's antient
adversary, is a liar and the father of lying, even so hath he stirred his servants and members to persecute Christ and his true
word and religion, which he ceaseth not to do most earnestly at this present. For whereas the most noble prince of famous memory, King Henry VIII., seeing the great abuses of the Latin masses, reformed some things
therein in his time, and also our late sovereign lord King Edward
VI. took the same wholly away,
for the manifold errors and abuses thereof, and restored in the place thereof Christ's holy supper, according to Christ's own institution, and as the Apostles
in the primitive Church used the

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
September.
The archbishop is sent to the Tower,

And the
mass is generally
restored.

The challenge was answered by an immediate summons before the council; the archbishop was accused of attempting to excite sedition among the people, and was forthwith committed to the Tower to wait, with Ridley and Latimer, there, till his fate should be decided on. Meantime the eagerness with which the country generally availed itself of the permission to restore the Catholic ritual, proved beyond a doubt that, except in London and a few large towns, the popular feeling was with the queen. The English people had no affection for the Papacy. They same in the beginning, the devil goeth about by lying to overthrow the Lord's holy supper, and to restore the Latin satisfactory masses, a thing of his own invention and device. And to bring the same more clearly to pass, some have abused the name of me, Thomas, Archbishop of Canterbury, bruiting abroad that I have set up the mass at Canterbury, and that I offered to say mass before the Queen's Highness at Paul's Cross, and I wot not where. I have been well exercised these twenty years, to suffer and to bear evil reports and lies, and have not been much grieved thereat, and have borne all things quietly; yet where untrue reports and lies turn to the hindrance of God's truth, they be in no ways to be tolerated and suffered. Wherefore these be to signify to the world that it was not I that did set up the mass at Canterbury, but a false, flattering, lying, and dissembling monk, which caused the mass to be set up there without my advice and counsel: and as for offering myself to say mass before the Queen's Highness, or in any other place, I never did, as her Grace knoweth well. But if her Grace will give me leave, I shall be ready to prove against all that will say the contrary, that the Communion-book, set forth by the most innocent and godly prince King Edward VI., in his High Court of Parliament, is conformable to the order which our Saviour Christ did both observe and command to be observed, which his Apostles and primitive Church used many years; whereas the mass in many things not only hath no foundation of Christ, his Apostles, nor the primitive Church, but also is contrary to the same, and containeth many horrible blasphemies.'

did not wish for the re-establishment of the religious orders, or the odious domination of the clergy. But the numerical majority among them did desire a celibate priesthood, the ceremonies which the custom of centuries had sanctified, and the ancient faith of their fathers, as reformed by Henry VIII. The rights of conscience had found no more consideration from the Protestant doctrinalists than from the most bigoted of the persecuting prelates; and the facility with which the professors of the gospel had yielded to moral temptations, had for the time inspired moderate men with much distrust for them and for their opinions.

Could Mary have been contented to pursue her victory no further, she would have preserved the hearts of her subjects; and the reaction, left to complete its own tendencies, would in a few years, perhaps, have accomplished in some measure her larger desires. But few sovereigns have understood less the effects of time and forbearance. She was deceived by the rapidity of her first success; she flattered herself that, difficult though it might be, she could build up again the ruined hierarchy, could compel the holders of Church property to open their hands, and could reunite the country to Rome. Before she had been three weeks on the throne, she had received, as will be presently mentioned, a secret messenger from the Vatican; and she had opened a correspondence with the Pope, entreating him, as an act of justice to herself and to those who

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
September.

But Mary mistakes the meaning of her success, and endeavours to press it further.

CH. 30. had remained true to their Catholic allegiance, to remove the interdict.*

A.D. 1553.
September.

Other actors in the great drama which was approaching were already commencing their parts.

Reginald
Pole reedits his book
against Henry
VIII.

The history
of the previous edition is difficult to unravel.

Reginald Pole having attempted in vain to recover a footing in England on the accession of Edward, having seen his passionate expectations from the Council of Trent melt into vapour, and Germany confirmed in heresy by the Peace of Passau, was engaged, in the summer of 1553, at a convent on the Lago di Garda, in re-editing his book against Henry VIII., with an intended dedication to Edward, of whose illness he was ignorant. The first edition, on the failure of his attempt to raise a Catholic crusade against his country, had been withdrawn from circulation; the world had not received it favourably, and there was a mystery about the publication which it is difficult to unravel. In the interval between the first despatch of the book into England as a private letter in the summer of 1536, and the appearance of it in print at Rome in the winter of 1538-9, it was rewritten, as I have already stated, enlarged, and divided into parts. In a letter of apology which Pole wrote to Charles V., in the summer or early autumn of 1538,† he spoke of that division as having been executed by himself;‡ he said that he had kept

* Renard to Charles V., September 9: Rolls House MSS.

† Before his embassy to Spain.

‡ Opus in quatuor libros sum partitus.

his book secret till the Church had spoken; but Paul having excommunicated Henry, he could no longer remain silent; he dwelt at length on the history of the work which he was then editing,* and he sent a copy at the same time with a letter, or he wrote a letter with the intention of sending a copy, to James V. of Scotland.†

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
September.

But Charles had refused to move; the book injured Henry not at all, and injured fatally those who were dear to Pole; he checked the circulation of the copies, and he declared to the Cardinal of Naples that it had been published only at the command of the Pope—that his own anxiety had been for the suppression of it.‡ Thirteen years after this, however, writing to Edward VI., he forgot that he had described himself to Charles as being himself engaged in the publication; and he assured the young king that he had never thought of publishing the book, that he had abhorred the very thought of publishing it; that it was prepared, edited, and printed by his friends at Rome during his own absence;§ now, at

* 'Scripta quæ nunc edo,' are his own words in the apology, and therefore in the third volume of this History, p. 308, I said that he published his book himself. There is no doubt, from the context, that in the word scripta he referred to that book and to no other.

† 'Eum ad te librum Catholice princeps nunc mitto, et sub nominis tui auspiciis cujus te strenuum pietatis ministrum præbes in lucem exire volo.'—Epistola

ad Regem Scotiæ: POLI Epistolæ, vol. i. p. 174.

‡ 'Qui si postea editus fuit magis id aliorum voluntate et illius qui mihi imperare potuit quam meâ est factum, mea vero fuit ut impressus suppresseretur.'—Ibid. vol. iv. p. 85.

§ 'Nam cum ad urbem ex Hispaniâ rediens libros injussu meo typis excusos reperissem, toto voluminis amicorum studio et operâ non sine ejus auctoritate qui jus imperandi haberet

CH. 30. length, he found himself obliged in his own person to give it forth, because an edition was in preparation elsewhere from one of the earlier copies; and he selected the son of Henry as the person to whom he could most becomingly dedicate the libel against his father's memory.

A.D. 1553.
September.
The new edition to be dedicated to Edward.

On the arrival at Rome of the news
of Mary's accession,
Pole is named legate to
England.

Edward did not live to receive this evidence of Pole's good feeling. He died before the edition was completed; and as soon as Northumberland's failure and Mary's accession were known at Rome, England was looked upon in the Consistory as already recovered to the faith, and Pole was chosen by the unanimous consent of the cardinals as the instrument of the reconciliation. The account of the proclamation of the queen was brought to the Vatican on the 6th in plures libros disposito quod ego non feceram quippe qui de ejus editione nunquam cogitasset,' &c.

'Quid aliud hoc significavit nisi me ab his libris divulgandis penitus abhorruisse ut certe abhorruui.'—Epistola ad Edwardum Sextum: POLI Epistolæ. The book being the sole authority for some of the darkest charges against Henry VIII., the history of it is of some importance. See vol. iv. of this history, appendix.

This was not the only instance in which his recollection of his own conduct was something treacherous. In the apology to Charles V., speaking of a war against Henry, he had said: 'Tempus venisse video, ad te primum missus, deinde ad Regem Christianissimum, ut hujus scelera per se quidem minime obscura detegam, et te Cæsar a bello Turcico abducere coner et quantum possum suadeam ut armata eo convertas si huic tanto malo aliter mederi non possis.' For thus 'levying war against his country,' Pole had been attainted. The name of traitor grated upon him. To Edward, therefore, he wrote: 'I invited the two sovereigns rather to win back the king, by the ways of love and affection, as a fallen friend and brother, than to assail him with arms as an enemy. This I never desired, nor did I urge any such conduct upon them. Hoc ego nunquam profecto volui neque cum illis egi.'—Epistola ad Edwardum Sextum: Ibid.

of August by a courier from Paris; the Pope in tears of joy drew his commission and dispatched it on the instant to the Lago di Garda; and on the 9th Pole himself wrote to Mary to say that he had been named legate, and waited her orders to fly to England. He still clung to his conviction that the revolution in all its parts had been the work of a small faction, and that he had but himself to set his foot upon the shore to be received with an ovation; his impulse was therefore to set out without delay; but the recollection, among other things, that he was attainted by act of parliament, forced him to delay unwillingly till he received formal permission to present himself.

CH. 30.
A.D. 1553.
August.

Anxious for authentic information as to the state of England and the queen's disposition, Julius had before dispatched also a secret agent, Commendone, afterwards a cardinal, with instructions to make his way to London to communicate with Mary, and if possible to learn her intentions from her own lips. Rapid movement was possible in Europe even with the roads of the sixteenth century. Commendone was probably sent from Rome as soon as Edward was known to be dead; he was in London, at all events, on the 8th of August,* disguised as an Italian gentleman in search of property which he professed had been bequeathed him by a kinsman. By the favour of Providence,† he fell in with Commendone, who had been sent over before, reaches London in disguise.

* He remained fifteen days, and he left for Rome the day after the execution of Northumberland.—PALLAVICINO.

† Cælitum ductu.

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
August.

He obtains
an interview with
the queen,
and learns that Pole
cannot yet
be admitted ;

At all events, in his capacity of legate.

an acquaintance, a returned Catholic refugee, who had a place in the household; and from this man he learnt that the queen was virtually a prisoner in the Tower, and that the heretics on the council allowed no one of whose business they disapproved to have access to her. Mary, however, was made acquainted with his arrival; a secret interview was managed, at which she promised to do her very best in the interests of the Church; but she had still, she said, to conquer her kingdom, and Pole's coming, much as she desired it, was for the moment out of the question; before she could draw the spiritual sword she must have the temporal sword more firmly in her grasp, and she looked to marriage as the best means of strengthening herself. If she married abroad, she thought at that time of the Emperor; if she accepted one of her subjects, she doubted—in her dislike of Courtenay—whether Pole might not return in a less odious capacity than that of Apostolic Legate; as the queen's intended husband the country might receive him; he had not yet been ordained priest, and deacon's orders, on a sufficient occasion, could perhaps be dispensed with.* The visit, or visits, were concealed even from Renard. Commendone was forbidden, under the strictest injunctions, to reveal what the queen might say to him, except to the Pope or to Pole; and it is the more likely that

* 'Nec destiterat regina id ipsum Commendone indicare, eum percontata an existimaret Pontificem ad id legem Polo relaxaturum, cum is nondum sacer-

dos sed diaconus esset, extarent-que hujusmodi relaxationum exempla, ingentis alicujus emolumenti gratiâ.'—PALLAVICINO.

she was serious in her expressions about the latter, from the care with which she left Renard in ignorance of Commendone's presence.

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
August.

The Papal messenger remained long enough to witness a rapid change in her position; he saw the restoration of the mass; he was in London at the execution, and he learnt the apostacy, of Northumberland; and he carried letters from Mary to the Pope with assurances of fidelity, and entreaties for the absolution of the kingdom. But Mary was obliged to say, notwithstanding, that for the present she was in the power of the people, of whom the majority mortally detested the Holy See; that the Lords of the Council were in possession of vast estates which had been alienated from the Church, and they feared their titles might be called in question;* and, although she agreed herself in all which Pole had urged (she had received his letter before Commendone left England), yet that, nevertheless, necessity acknowledged no law. Her heretical sister was in every one's mouth, and might at any moment take her place on the throne, and for the present, she said, to her deep regret, she could not, with prudence or safety, allow the legate to come to her.

He carries letters from her to the Pope with assurances of loyalty;

But she anticipates difficulties in restoring the papal authority;

The queen's letters were confirmed by Commendone himself; he had been permitted to confer in private with more than one good Catholic in the realm; and every one had given him the same as-

Commendone assures the Pope that the difficulties are real.

* Mary described her throne as, 'acquistato per benevolenze di quei popoli, che per le maggior parte odiano a morte questa sancta sede, oltre gl' interessi dei beni ecclesiastici occupati da molti signori, che sono del suo consiglio.'—Julius III. to Pole: POLII Epistolæ, vol. iv.

CH. 30. surances,* although he had urged upon them the
 A.D. 1553. opposite opinion entertained by Pole:† he had August. himself witnessed the disposition with which the people regarded Elizabeth, and he was satisfied that the queen's alarm on this head was not exaggerated.‡

The Pope,
 therefore,
 cautions Pole
 against in-discretion.

In opinions so emphatically given, the Pope was obliged to acquiesce, and the same view was enforced upon him equally strongly by the Emperor. Charles knew England tolerably well; he was acquainted perfectly well with the moral and intellectual unfitness of the intended legate for any office which required discretion; and Julius, therefore, was obliged to communicate to the eager cardinal the necessity of delay, and to express his fear that, by excess of zeal, he might injure the cause and alienate the well-affected queen.§ Though Pole might not go to England, however, he might go, as he went before, to the immediate neighbourhood; he might repair to Flanders, with a nominal commission to mediate, in the peace which was still hoped for. In Flanders, though the Pope forbore to tell him so, he would be under the Emperor's eye and under the Emperor's control, till the vital question of the

* 'Le parole che haveva inteso da lei disse di haver inteso da persone Catholice et digne di fede in quel paese.'—Julius III. to Pole: POLI Epistolæ, vol. iv.

† 'Et similmente espose l'opinione vostra con le ragioni che vi movano.'—Ibid.

‡ Ibid.

§ 'Onde se per questa molta diligenza nostra, le avvenisse qualche caso sinistro, si rovinerebbe forse (il che Dio non voglie) ogni speranza della reductione di quella patria, levando se le forze a questa buona e Catholica regina, ovvero alienando la de noi par offesa ricevuta.'—Ibid.

queen's marriage had been disposed of, or till CH. 30.
England was in a calmer humour.

About the marriage Charles was more anxious than ever; Pole was understood to have declined the honour of being a competitor;* Renard had informed the Emperor of the present direction of the queen's own inclinations; and treating himself, therefore, as out of the question on the score of age and infirmities, he instructed his minister to propose the Prince of Spain as a person whom the religious and the political interests of the world alike recommended to her as a husband. The alliance of England, Spain, and Flanders would command a European supremacy; their united fleets would sweep the seas, and Scotland, deprived of support from France, must become an English province; while sufficient guarantees could be provided easily for the security of English liberties. These, in themselves, were powerful reasons; Renard was permitted to increase their cogency by promises of pensions, lands, and titles, or by hard money in hand, in whatever direction such liberality could be usefully employed.†

A.D. 1553.
September.

Charles instructs Renard to propose the Prince of Spain to the queen.

The external advantages of the connexion were obvious; it recommended itself to the queen from the Spanish sympathies which she had contracted in her blood, and from the assistance which it pro-

* 'Ayant le Cardinal Pole si expressement declairé qu'il n'a nul désir de soy marier, et que nous tenons, que pour avoir si longuement suivi l'état ecclesias-

tique, et s'accommodé aux choses duysant a icelluy et estant diacre.'—Charles V. to Renard: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv.
† Ibid.

CH. 30.

A. D. 1553.
September.
The queen
raises objections, for the pleasure of bearing them removed.

mised to afford her in the great pursuit of her life. The proposal was first suggested informally. Mary affected to find difficulties; yet, if she raised objections, it was only to prolong the conversation upon a subject which delighted her. She spoke of her age; Philip was twenty-seven, she ten years older; she called him 'boy'; she feared she might not be enough for him; she was unsusceptible; she had no experience in love;* with such other phrases, which Renard interpreted at their true importance. With the queen there would be no difficulty; with the council it was far otherwise. Lord Paget was the only English statesman who listened with any show of favour.

Condition
of parties
in England.
The whole laity are opposed to reunion
with Rome.

The complication of parties is not to be easily disentangled. Some attempt, however, may be partially successful.

The council, the peers, the Commons, the entire lay voices of England, liberal and conservative alike, were opposed to Rome; Gardiner was the only statesman in the country who thought a return to Catholic union practicable or desirable; while there was scarcely an influential family, titled or untitled, which was not, by grant or purchase, in possession of confiscated Church property.

There was an equal unanimity in the dread that if Mary became the wife of a Spanish sovereign England would, like the Low Countries, sink into a provincial dependency; while, again, there was the utmost unwillingness to be again entangled in the European war; the French ambassador insisted that the Emperor only desired the marriage to secure English assistance; and the council believed that, whatever promises might be made, whatever stipulations insisted on, such a marriage, sooner or later, would implicate them. The country was exhausted, the currency ruined, the people in a state of unexampled suffering, and the only remedy was to be looked for in quiet and public economy; there were attractions in the offer of a powerful alliance, but the very greatness of it added to their reluctance; they desired to isolate England from European quarrels, and marry their queen at home. With these opinions Paget alone disagreed, while Gardiner was loudly national.

* 'Elle jura que jamais elle n'avoit senti esquillon de ce que l'on appelle amour, ny entre en pensement de volupté,' &c.—Renard to the Bishop of Arras: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv.

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
September.
The whole council, except Lord Paget, are opposed to the Spanish marriage.

On the other hand, though Gardiner held the restoration of the Papal authority to be tolerable, yet he dreaded the return of Pole, as being likely to supersede him in the direction of the English Church;* the party who agreed with the Chancellor about the marriage, and about Pole, disagreed with him about the Pope; while Paget, who was in favour of the marriage, was with the lords on the supremacy, and, as the Romanizing views of the queen became notorious, was inclining, with Arundel and Pembroke, towards the Protestants.

Gardiner is opposed to the return of Pole.

No wonder, therefore, that the whole council were in confusion and at cross purposes. No

* Renard to Charles V.: Rolls House MSS.

CH. 30. sooner were Charles's proposals definitely known than the entire machinery of the government was dislocated. Mary represented herself to Renard as without a friend whom she could trust; and the letters, both of Renard and Noailles, contain little else but reports how the Lords were either quarrelling, or had, one after the other, withdrawn in disgust to their country houses. Now it was Pembroke that was gone, now Mason, now Paget; then Courtenay was a prisoner in his house; then Lord Winchester was forbidden to appear at court: the ministers were in distrust of each other and of their mistress; the queen was condemned to keep them in their offices because she durst not make them enemies; while the Stanleys, Howards, Talbots, and Nevilles were glooming apart, indignant at the neglect of their own claims.

A.D. 1553.
September.
The council
are at cross
purposes,

And on bad
terms with one another
and with
the queen.

The queen herself was alternately angry and miserable; by the middle of September Renard congratulated Charles on her growing ill-humour; the five Dudleys and Lady Jane, he hoped, would be now disposed of, and Elizabeth would soon follow.

Elizabeth's danger was great, and proceeded as much from her friends' indiscretion as from the hatred of her enemies. Every one who disliked the queen's measures, used Elizabeth's name. Renard was for ever hissing his suspicions in the queen's ear, and, unfortunately, she was a too willing listener—not, indeed, that Renard hated Elizabeth for her own sake, for he rather admired her—or for religion's sake, for he had a

Renard endeavours to destroy
Elizabeth.

most statesmanlike indifference to religion; but he saw in her the queen's successful rival in the favour of the people, the heir-presumptive to the crown, whose influence would increase the further the queen travelled on the road on which he was leading her, and, therefore, an enemy who, if possible, should be destroyed. An opportunity of creating a collision between the sisters was not long wanting. The Lords of the Council were now generally present at mass in the royal chapel. Elizabeth, with Anne of Cleves, had as yet refused to appear. Her resistance was held to imply a sinister intention; and on the 2nd and 3rd of September the council were instructed to bring her to compliance.* Yet the days passed, the priest sang, and the heir to the crown continued absent. Gardiner, indeed, told Renard that she was not obdurate; he had spoken to her, and she had seemed to say that, if he could convince her, her objections would cease;† but they had not ceased so far; she did not attend. In the happiness of her first triumph Mary had treated Elizabeth like a sister; but her manner had relapsed into coldness; and the princess, at length, knowing how her name was made use of, requested a private interview, which, with difficulty, was granted. The sisters, each accompanied by a single lady, met in a gallery with a half-door between them. Elizabeth threw herself on her knees. She said that she perceived

CH. 30.
A.D. 1553.
September.

Elizabeth does not attend the queen's mass.

She requests a private interview with the queen, which is granted.

* Noailles to the King of France: Ambassades, vol. ii. p. 147.

† Renard to Charles V.: Rolls House MSS.

CH. 30. her Majesty was displeased with her; she could not tell what the cause might be, unless it was religion; and for this, she said, she might be reasonably forgiven; she had been educated, as the queen was aware, in the modern belief, and she understood no other; if her Majesty would send her books and teachers, she would read; she would listen; she could say no more.

A.D. 1553.
September.

The queen
urges obedience, and Elizabeth
comes to
mass once.

Mary, at the moment, was delighted. Like a true Catholic, however, she insisted that obedience must precede faith; come to the mass, she said, and belief will be the reward of your submission; make your first trial on the mass of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin.*

Elizabeth consented. She was present, but present reluctantly; pretending, as Renard said, to be ill; the next Sunday she was again absent. The queen, knowing the effect which her conduct would produce, again sent for her, and asked her earnestly what she really believed; the world said that, although she had complied once, her compliance was feigned, and that she had submitted out of fear; she desired to hear the truth. Elizabeth could reply merely that she had done as the queen had required her to do, with no ulterior purpose; if her Majesty wished, she would make a public declaration to that is not satisfied, and Renard

The queen
feeds her suspicions.

effect.† The queen was obliged to receive her answer; but she told Renard that her sister trembled as she spoke, and well, Renard said, he understood her agitation; she was the hope of CH. 30.

* Renard to Charles V.: Rolls House MSS.

† Renard to Charles V., September 23: Ibid.

the heretics, and the heretics were raising their heads; the Papists, they said, had had their A.D. 1553.
day, but it was waning; if Elizabeth lived, September.
England would again apostatize.

There was no difficulty in keeping the queen's Nor does jealousy alive against her sister. Courtenay was Renard approve of another offence in the eye of the ambassador, as Courtenay,
whom he
the rival to Philip, who found favour with the regards as Philip's
English council. The queen affected to treat rival.
Courtenay as a child; she commanded him to keep to his house; she forbade him to dine abroad without special permission; the title of Earl of Devon was given to him, and he had a dress made for him to take his seat in, of velvet
and gold, but the queen would not allow him to wear it:* and yet, to her own and the ambassador's mortification, she learnt that he affected
the state of a prince; that he spoke of his marriage with her as certain; that certain prelates, Gardiner especially, encouraged his expectation, and one or more of them had knelt in his presence.† The danger had been felt from the first that, if she persisted in her fancy for the Prince of Spain, Courtenay might turn his addresses to Elizabeth; the Lords would in that case
fall off to his support, and the crown would fall
from her head as easily as it had settled there.

More afflicting to Mary than these personal grievances, was the pertinacity with which the

* NOAILLES.

† Renard to Charles V., September 19: Rolls House MSS.

CH. 30. council continued, in their public documents, to
 A.D. 1553. describe her as Head of the Church, the execrable
 September. title which was the central root of the apostacy.
 In vain she protested; the hateful form—indispensable till it was taken away by parliament—was thrust under her eyes in every paper which was brought to her for signature, and she was obliged to acknowledge the designation with her own hand and pen.

Shall the queen be crowned before or after the meeting of parliament?

The people
 insist that the Spanish
 marriage
 shall not be.

Amidst these anxieties, September wore away. Parliament was to open on the fifth of October, and either before or after the meeting the queen was to be crowned. The ceremony was an occasion of considerable agitation; Mary herself was alarmed lest the Holy Oil should have lost its efficacy through the interdict; and she entreated Renard to procure her a fresh supply from Flanders, blessed by the excellent hands of the Bishop of Arras. But the oil was not the gravest difficulty. As the rumour spread of the intended Spanish marriage, libellous handbills were scattered about London; the people said it should not be till they had fought for it. A disturbance at Greenwich, on the 25th of September, extended to Southwark, where Gardiner's house was attacked;* and a plot was discovered to murder him: in the day he wore a shirt of mail under his robes, and he slept with a guard of a hundred men. Threatening notices were even found on the floor of the queen's bedroom, left there by unknown hands. Noailles assured the Lords that his own government would regard the marriage as little short of a declaration of war, so inevitably would war be the result of it; and Gardiner, who was unjustly suspected of being in the Spanish interest, desired to delay the coronation till parliament should have met; intending that the first act of the assembly should be to tie Mary's hands with a memorial which she could not set aside. She inherited under her father's will, by which her accession was made conditional on her marrying not without the consent of the council; Parliament might remind her both of her own obligation to obey her father's injunctions, and of theirs to see that they were obeyed.

* NOAILLES; RENARD.

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
September.
Gardiner
desires to postpone
the coronation till parliament
has given an opinion
on the
marriage.

With the same object, though not with the same object only, the Lords of the Council supported the Bishop of Winchester. They proposed to alter the form of the coronation oath, and to bind the queen by an especial clause to maintain the independence of the English Church—a precaution, as it proved, not unnecessary—for the existing form was already inconvenient, and Mary was meditating how, when called on to swear to observe the laws and constitutions of the realm, she could introduce an adjective sub silentio; she intended to swear only that she would observe the just laws and constitutions.* But she looked with the gravest alarm to the introduction of more awkward phrases; if words were added which would be equivalent (as she would understand them) to a denial of Christ and his Church, she had resolved to refuse at all hazards.†

Projected
alteration
of the coronation oath.

* Renard to Charles V.: Rolls House MSS.

† Ibid.

CH. 30. But her courage was not put to the test. The true grounds on which the delay of the coronation was desired could not be avowed. The queen was told that her passage through the streets would be unsafe until her accession had been sanctioned by parliament, and the act repealed by which she was illegitimatized. With Paget's help she faced down these objections, and declared that she would be crowned at once; she appointed the 1st of October for the ceremony; on the 28th she sent for the council to attempt an appeal to their generosity. She spoke to them at length of her past life and sufferings, of the conspiracy to set her aside, and of the wonderful Providence which had preserved her and raised her to the throne; her only desire, she said, was to do her duty to God and to her subjects; and she hoped, turning as she spoke, pointedly to Gardiner, that they would not forget their loyalty, and would stand by her in her extreme necessity. Observing them hesitate, she cried, 'My Lords, on my knees I implore you'—and flung herself on the ground at their feet.*

A.D. 1553.
September.

The queen resolves that she will be crowned immediately,

And appeals to the generosity of the council, not without effect.

The most skilful acting could not have served Mary's purpose better than this outburst of natural emotion; the spectacle of their kneeling sovereign overcame for a time the scheming passions of her ministers; they were affected, burst into tears, and withdrew their opposition to her wishes.†

* 'Devant les quelz elle se mist à genoulx.'—Renard to Charles V.: Rolls House MSS.

† Ibid.

On the 30th, the procession from the Tower to Westminster through the streets was safely accomplished. The retinues of the Lords protected the queen from insult, and London put on its usual outward signs of rejoicing; St. Paul's spire was rigged with yards like a ship's mast, an adventurous sailor sitting astride on the weathercock five hundred feet in the air:* there was no interruption; and the next day, Arras having sent the necessary unction,† the ceremony was performed at the Abbey without fresh burdens being laid on Mary's conscience.

CH. 30.
A.D. 1553.
October.
The procession through the streets takes place without interruption.

The banquet in the Great Hall passed off with equal success; Sir Edward Dymocke, the champion, rode in and flung down his gage, and was listened to with becoming silence: on the whole, Mary's friends were agreeably disappointed; only Renard observed that, between the French ambassador and the Lady Elizabeth there seemed to be some secret understanding; the princess saluted Noailles as he passed her; Renard she would neither address nor look at—and Renard was told that she complained to Noailles of the weight of her coronet, and that Noailles 'bade her have

The queen is crowned.

Renard, Noailles, and the Lady Elizabeth.

* The Hot Gospeller, half-recovered from his gaol fever, got out of bed to see the spectacle, and took his station at the west end of St. Paul's. The procession passed so close as almost to touch him, and one of the train seeing him muffled up, and looking more dead than alive, said, There is one that loveth her Majesty well, to come out in such condition. The queen turned her head and looked at him. To hear that any one of her subjects loved her just then was too welcome to be overlooked.—Underhill's Narrative: MS. Harleian, 425.

† Arras to Renard: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv. p. 105.

CH. 30. patience, and before long she would exchange it for a crown.*

A.D. 1553.
October.

The queen
thinks of raising an Irish body-
guard.

The coronation was a step gained; it was one more victory, yet it produced no material alteration. Rome, and the Spanish marriage, remained as before, insoluble elements of difficulty; the queen, to her misfortune, was driven to rely more and more on Renard; and at this time she was so desperate and so ill-advised as to think of surrounding herself with an Irish body-guard; she went so far as to send a commission to Sir George Stanley for their transport.†

A pamphlet appears against the
marriage.

The scheme was abandoned, but not because her relations with her own people were improved. Before parliament met, an anonymous pamphlet appeared by some English nobleman on the encroachments of the House of Austria, and on the treatment of other countries which had fallen through marriages into Austrian hands. In Lombardy and Naples every office of trust was described as held by a Spaniard; the Prince of Salerno was banished, the Prince of Benevento was a prisoner in Flanders, the Duke of Calabria a prisoner in Spain. Treating Mary's hopes of children as ridiculous, the writer pictured England, bound

* Renard to the Regent Mary: Rolls House MSS.

† 'Mary, by the grace of God, Queen of England, &c. . . . to all mayors, sheriffs, justices of the peace, and other our subjects, these our letters, hearing or seeing: whereas we have appointed a certain number of able men to be presently levied for our service within our realm of Ireland, and to be transported hither with diligence, we let you wit that for that purpose we have authorized our trusty Sir George Stanley, Knight,' &c.—October 5, 1553. From the original Commission: Tanner MSS. 90, Bodleian Library.

hand and foot, at the mercy of the insolent Philip, whose first step, on entering the country, would be to seize the Tower and the fleet, the next, to introduce a Spanish army and suppress the parliament. The free, glorious England of the Plantagenets would then be converted into a prostrate appanage of the dominions of Don Carlos. The pamphlet was but the expression of the universal feeling. Gardiner, indeed, perplexed between his religion and his country, for a few days wavered. Gardiner had a long debt to pay off against the Protestants, and a Spanish force, divided into garrisons for London and other towns, would assist him materially.* Partly, however, from attachment to Courtenay, partly from loyalty to his country, he shook off the temptation and continued to support the opposition.†

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
October.

Gardiner
hesitates,

But again
adheres to the opposition.

* 'J'estime qu'il desire presentment y veoir une bonne partie de l'Espagne et Allemagne, y tenir grosses et fortes garnisons, pour mortifier ce peuple, et s'en venger,' &c.—Noailles to the King of France: Ambassades, vol. ii. p. 169.

† A look at Gardiner, at this time, through contemporary eyes, assists much towards the understanding him. Thomas Mountain, parson of St. Michael's by the Tower, an ultra-Reformer, had been out with Northumberland at Cambridge. The following story is related by himself.

'Sunday, October 8,' Mountain says, 'I ministered service, according to the godly order set forth by that blessed prince King Edward, the parish communicating at the Holy Supper. Now, while I was even a breaking of bread at the table, saying to the communicants, Take and eat this, Drink this, there were standing by several serving-men, to see and hear, belonging to the Bishop of Winchester; among whom, one of them most shamefully blasphemed God, saying:

'Yea, by God's blood, standest thou there yet, saying—Take and eat, Take and drink; will not this gear be left yet? You shall be made to sing another song within these few days, I trow, or else I have lost my mark.'

A day or two after came an

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
October.

Mary, except for the cautious support of Paget, stood otherwise alone coquetting with order for Mountain to appear before Gardiner at Winchester House. Mountain said he would appear after morning prayers; but the messenger's orders were not to leave him, and he was obliged to obey on the instant.

The bishop was standing when he entered, 'in a bay window, with a great company about him; among them Sir Anthony St. Leger, reappointed Lord Deputy of Ireland.'

'Thou heretic,' the bishop began; 'how darest thou be so bold as to use that schismatical service still, seeing God hath sent us a Catholic queen. There is such an abominable company of you, as is able to poison a whole realm with heresies.'

'My lord,' Mountain replied, 'I am no heretic, for in that way you count heresy, so worship we the living God.'

'God's passion,' said the bishop, 'did I not tell you, my Lord Deputy, how you should know a heretic. He is up with his living God as though there was a dead God. They have nothing in their mouths, these heretics, but the Lord liveth; the living God; the Lord! the Lord! and nothing but the Lord.'

'Here,' says Mountain, 'he chafed like a bishop; and as his manner was, many times he put off his cap, and rubbed to and fro up and down the forepart of his head, where a lock of hair was always standing up.'

'My good Lord Chancellor,' St. Leger said to him, 'trouble not yourself with this heretic; I think all the world is full of them; God bless me from them. But, as your Lordship said, having a Christian queen reigning over us, I trust there will shortly be a reformation and an order taken with these heretics.' 'Submit yourself unto my lord,' he said to Mountain, 'and you shall find favour.'

'Thank you, sir,' Mountain answered, 'ply your own suit, and let me alone.'

A bystander then put in that the parson of St. Michael's was a traitor as well as a heretic. He had been in the field with the duke against the queen.

'Is it even so?' cried Gardiner; 'these be always linked together, treason and heresy. Off with him to the Marshalsea; this is one of our new broached brethren that speaketh against good works; your fraternity was, is, and ever will be unprofitable in all ages, and good for nothing but the fire.'—Troubles of Thomas Mountain: printed by STYPER.

The portraits of Gardiner represent a fine, vehement-looking man. The following description of him, by Ponet, his rival in the see of Winchester, gives the image as it was reflected in Ponet's antipathies.

'The doctor hath a swart colour, hanging look, frowning brows, eyes an inch within his head, a nose hooked like a buz-

her fancy, and played upon by the skilful Renard. CH. 30.
 The queen and the ambassador were incessantly together, and Philip was the never-tiring subject of conversation between them. She talked of his disposition. She had heard, she said, that he was proud; that he was inferior to his father in point of ability; and then he was young, and she had been told sad stories about him; if he was of warm temperament, he would not suit her at all, she said, considering the age at which she had arrived.* Moreover, when she was married, she must obey as God commanded; her husband, perhaps, might wish to place Spaniards in authority in England, and she would have to refuse; and that he would not like. To all of which, being the fluttering of the caught fly, Renard would answer that his Highness was more like an angel than a man; his youth was in his favour, for he might live to see his child of age, and England had had too much experience of minorities. Life, he added remarkably, was shorter than it used to be; sixty was now a great age for a king; and as the world was, men were as mature at thirty as in the days of his grandfather they were considered at forty.† Then touching the constant sore—‘her Majesty,’ he said, ‘had four

A.D. 1553.
 October.
 The queen
 questions
 Renard on Philip's
 character.

Renard is eloquent on Philip's
 virtues.

zard's, nostrils like a horse, ever snuffing in the wind; a sparrow mouth, great paws like the devil, talons on his feet like a gripe, two inches longer than the natural toes, and so tied with sinews that he cannot abide to be touched.'

* 'Que s'il vouloit estre voluptueux ce n'est ce quelle desire pour estre de telle eaige.'—Renard to the Emperor: Rolls House MSS.

† Ibid.

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.

October.

The queen
has four enemies—
the heretics, the party of Northum-
berland,
the courts
of France
and Scotland, and
Elizabeth.

enemies, who would never rest till they had destroyed her or were themselves destroyed—the heretics, the friends of the late Duke of Northumberland, the courts of France and Scotland, and, lastly, her sister Elizabeth. Her subjects were restless, turbulent, and changeable as the ocean of which they were so fond;* the sovereigns of England had been only able to rule with a hand of iron, and with severities which had earned them the name of tyrants;† they had not spared the blood royal in order to secure their thrones, and she too must act as they had acted, leaning for support, meanwhile, on the arm of a powerful prince.

To these dark hints Mary ever listened eagerly—meantime she was harassed painfully from another quarter.

Reginald
Pole insists
that he alone understands
England.

Reginald Pole, as might have been expected from his temperament, could ill endure the delay of his return to England. The hesitation of the queen and the objections of the Emperor were grounded upon arguments which he assured himself were fallacious; the English nation, he continued to insist, were devoted to the Holy See; so far from being himself unpopular, the Cornish

* 'Vostre Majesté soit les humeurs des Angloys et leur voluntee estre forte discordantes, desirieux de nouuelleté, de mutation, et vindicatifz, soit pour estre insulaires, ou pour tenir ce naturel de la marine.'—Renard to Mary: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv. p. 129.

† 'Les roys du passé ont esté forcés de traicter en rigueur de justice et effusion de sang par l'execution de plusieurs du royaume, voir du sang royal, pour s'asseurer et maintenir leur royaume, dont ils ont acquis le renom de tyrans et cruelz.'—Ibid.

in the rebellion under Edward had petitioned for his recall, and had even designated him by the forbidden name of cardinal; they loved him and they longed for him; and, regarding himself as the chosen instrument of Providence to repair the iniquities of Henry VIII., he held the obstructions to his return not only to be mistaken, but to be impious. The duty of the returning prodigal was to submit; to lay aside all earthly considerations—to obey God, God's viceregent the Pope, and himself the Pope's representative.

CH. 30.
A.D. 1553.
October.

Mendoza had been sent by Charles to meet Pole on his way to Flanders, and reason him into moderation. In return the legate wrote himself to Charles's confessor, commanding him to explain to his master the sin which he was committing. 'The objection to his going to England,' as Pole understood, 'was the supposed danger of an outbreak. Were the truth as the Emperor feared, the queen's first duty would be, nevertheless, to God, her own soul, and the souls of the millions of her subjects who were perishing in separation from the Church; for no worldly policy or carnal respect ought she to defer for a moment to apply a remedy to so monstrous a calamity.* But the danger was imaginary—or, rather, such danger as there was, arose from the opposite cause. The right of the queen to the throne did not rest on an

He sends a lecture to the Emperor on his unchristian conduct.

* 'Quanto grave peccato et irreparabil danno sia il differir cosa che pertenga alle salute di tante anime, le quale mentre quel regno sta disunito dalla

Chiesa, si trovano in manifesto pericolo della loro dannatione.'
—Pole to the Emperor's Confessor: MS. Germany, bundle 16, State Paper Office.

CH. 30. act of parliament; it rested on her birth as the
 A.D. 1553. lawful child of the lawful marriage between Henry October. and Catherine of Arragon. Parliament, he was informed, would affirm the marriage legitimate,
 if nothing was said about the Pope; but, unless the Pope's authority was first recognised, parliament would only stultify itself; the Papal dispensation alone made valid a connexion which,
 if the Pope had no power to dispense, was incestuous, and the offspring of it illegitimate.
 God had made the peaceful settlement of the kingdom dependent on submission to the Holy See,* and for parliament to interfere and give an opinion upon the subject would be but a fresh act
 of schism and disobedience.'

The queen
is no queen
until the Pope is recognised.

Pole does
the queen
an unwilling service.

The original letter, being in our own State
 Paper Office, was probably given by the confessor
 to Charles, and by Charles sent over to England.
 Most logical it was; so logical that it quite outwitted the intention of the writer. While it added to the queen's distress, it removed, nevertheless, all objections which might have been raised by the anti-papal party against the act to legitimize her. So long as there was a fear that, by a repeal of the Act of Divorce between her father and mother, the Pope's authority might indirectly be admitted, some difficulty was

* God, he said, had joined the title to the crown, 'con
 l'obedientia della Sede Apostoli-
 ca, che levata questa viene a cader
 in tutto, quella non essendo ella legitime herede del regno, se non per la legitimation del matrimonio della regina sua madre, et questa non valendo senon per l'autorita et dispensa del Papa.'

 —Pole to the Emperor's Confessor: MS. Germany, bundle 16,
 State Paper Office.

to be anticipated; as a new assertion of English independence, it could be carried with unanimous alacrity.

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
October 5.

What parliament would or would not consent to, however, would soon cease to be a mystery. The advice of the Emperor on the elections had been, for the most part, followed. It was obvious, indeed, that a sovereign who was unable to control her council was in no position to dictate to constituencies. There were no circulars to the lords-lieutenant of counties, such as Northumberland had issued, or such as Mary herself, a year later, was able to issue; while the unusual number of members returned to the Lower House—four hundred and thirty, it will be seen, voted on one great occasion—shows that the issue of writs had been on the widest scale. On the whole, it was, perhaps, the fairest election which had taken place for many years. In the House of Lords the ejection of the Reforming bishops and the restoration of their opponents—the death, imprisonment, or disgrace of three noblemen on the Reforming side, and the return to public life of the peers who, in the late reign, had habitually absented themselves, had restored a conservative majority. How the representatives of the people would conduct themselves was the anxious and all-agitating question. The queen, however, could console herself with knowing that Protestantism, as a system of belief, had made its way chiefly among the young; the votes were with the middle-aged and the old.

The elections are completed.

The queen has a majority among the Lords.

The session opened on the 5th of October with

CH. 30. the ancient form, so long omitted, of the mass of the Holy Ghost. Two Protestant bishops, Taylor of Lincoln and Harley of Hereford, who had been left as yet undisturbed in their sees, on the service commencing, rose and went out; they were not allowed to return. Two prebends, Alexander Nowel and Doctor Tregonwell had been returned to the Lower House; Nowel as a member of convocation was declared ineligible;* Tregonwell, being a layman, was, on consideration, allowed to retain his seat. These were the only ejections which can be specifically traced, and the silence of those who were interested in making the worst of Mary's conduct, may be taken to prove that they did not know of any more.† The Houses, purged of these elements, then settled to their work; and, plunging at once into the great question of the time, the Commons came to an instant understanding that the lay owners of Church lands should

A.D. 1553.
October 5.
Parliament
opens; objectionable persons are removed.

* 'Friday, October 13, it was declared by the commissioners that Alex. Nowel, being prebendary in Westminster, and thereby having a voice in the Convocation House, cannot be a member of this House, and so agreed by the House.'—Commons Journal, 1 Mary.

† Burnet and other Protestant writers are loud-voiced with eloquent generalities on the interference with the elections, and the ill-treatment of the Reforming members; but of interference with the elections they can produce no evidence, and of members ejected they name no more than the two bishops and the two prebends. Noailles, indeed, who had opportunities of knowing, says something on both points. 'Ne fault douter, sire,' he wrote to the King of France, 'que la dicte dame n'obtienne presque tout ce qu'elle voudra en ce parlement, de tant qu'elle a faict faire election de ceulx qui pourvont estre en sa faveur, et jeter quelques uns à elle suspectz.' The queen had probably done what she could; but the influence which she could exercise must obviously have been extremely small, and the event showed that the ambassador was entirely wrong in his expectations.

not be disturbed in their tenures under any pretext whatsoever. CH. 30.

Commendone, on returning to Rome, had disregarded his obligations to secrecy, and had related all that the queen had said to him in the open Consistory; from the Consistory the account travelled back to England, and arrived inopportunately at the opening of parliament. The fatal subject of the lands had been spoken of, and the queen had expressed to Commendone her intention to restore them, if possible, to the Church. The council cross-questioned her, and she could neither deny her words nor explain them away; the Commons first, the Lords immediately after, showed her that, whatever might be her own hopes or wishes, their minds on that point were irrevocably fixed.*

A.D. 1553.
October.
The queen is given to understand that the Church lands shall never be restored,

No less distinct were the opinions expressed in the Lower House on the Papacy. The authority of the Pope, as understood in England, was not a question of doctrine, nor was the opposition to it of recent origin. It had been thrown off after a struggle which had lasted for centuries, and a victory† so hardly won was not to be lightly parted

Nor the authority of the Pope re-established,

* Renard to Charles V., October 19: Rolls House MSS.

† Even the most reactionary clergy, men like Abbot Feckenham and Doctor Bourne, had no desire, as yet, to be re-united to Rome. In a discussion with Ridley in the Tower, on the real presence, Feckenham argued that forty years before all the world was agreed about it. Forty years ago, said Ridley, all held that the Bishop of Rome was supreme head of the Universal Church. What then, was Master Feckenham beginning to say? but Master Secretary (Bourne) took the tale, and said that was a positive law. A positive law, quoth Ridley; he would not have it so; he challenged it by Christ's own word, by the words 'Thou art Peter; thou art Cephas.' Tush, quoth Master Secretary, it was not counted an article of our faith.—FOXE, vol. vi.

CH. 30. with. Lord Paget warned the queen that Pole's name must not be so much as mentioned, or some
 A.D. 1553. unwelcome resolution about him would be imme-October. diately passed;* and she was in hourly dread that before they would consent to anything, they would question her whether she would or would not maintain the royal supremacy.† On the other hand, if no difficulties were raised about the Pope or the Church lands, the preliminary discussion, both among Lords and Commons, showed a general disposition to re-establish religion in the condition
 in which Henry left it—provided, that is to say,
 no penalties were to attach to nonconformity; and
 the Houses were ready also to take the step so much deprecated by Pole, and pass a measure
 legitimatizing the queen, provided no mention was to be made of the Papal dispensation. Some difference of opinion on the last point had shown itself in the House of Commons,‡ but the legate's ingenuity had removed all serious obstacles.

But the Act of Uniformity
 may be re-
 repealed,

And the queen declared legitimate.

Again parliament seemed determined that the Act of Succession, and the will of Henry VIII., should not be tampered with, to the dis-favour of Elizabeth. It is singular that Renard, and probably, therefore, Mary, were unaware of the position in which Elizabeth was placed towards the crown. They imagined that her only title was as a presumptively legitimate child; that if the Act of Divorce between Catherine of Arra-gon and Henry was repealed, she must then, as a

* Renard to Charles V., October 28: Rolls House MSS.

† Ibid. October 15: Rolls House MSS.

‡ Ibid.

bastard, be cut off from her expectations. Had Elizabeth's prospects been liable to be affected by the legitimization of her sister, the queen would have sued as vainly for it as she sued afterwards in favour of her husband. With unmixed mortification Renard learnt that Elizabeth, in the eye of the law, had been as illegitimate as Mary, and that her place in the order of succession rested on her father's will. He flattered himself, at first, that Henry's dispositions could be set aside;* but he very soon found that there was no present hope of it.

CH. 30.
A.D. 1553.
October.
Elizabeth's prospects, however, may not be interfered with.

These general features of the temper of parliament were elicited in conversation in the first few days of the session. The Marchioness of Exeter, during the same days, was released from her attainder, Courtenay was restored in blood, and a law, similar to that with which Somerset commenced his Protectorate, repealed all late treason acts, restricted the definition of treason within the limits of the statute of Edward III., and relieved the clergy of the recent extensions of the Premunire. The queen gave her assent to these three measures on the 21st of October; and there was then an interval of three days, during which the bishops were consulted on the view taken by parliament of the queen's legitimacy. Renard told the Bishop of Norwich, Thirlby, that they must bend to the times, and leave the Pope to his fortunes. They acted on the ambassador's advice. An act was passed, in which the marriage from

Treason acts repealed, and Premunire restricted.

* Renard to Charles V., October 21: Rolls House MSS.

CH. 30. which the queen was sprung, was declared valid, and the Pope's name was not mentioned; but the essential point being secured, the framers of the statute were willing to gratify their mistress by the intensity of the bitterness with which the history of the divorce was related.* The bishops must have been glad to escape from so mortifying a subject, and to apply themselves to the more congenial subject of religion.

A.D. 1553.
October.
The Act of Divorce between Henry and Catherine
of Arragon
is repealed.

As soon as the disposition of parliament had been generally ascertained, the restoration of the mass was first formally submitted, for the sake of decency, to the clergy in convocation.

Convocation meets
to consider the restoration of
the mass.

The bench had been purged of dangerous elements. The Lower House contained a small fraction of Protestants just large enough to permit a controversy, and to ensure a triumph to their antagonists. The proceedings opened with a sermon from Harpsfeld, then chaplain of the Bishop of London, in which, in a series of ascending antitheses, Northumberland was described as Holofernes, and Mary as Judith; Northumberland was Haman, and Mary was Esther; Northumberland was Sisera, and Mary was the mother in Israel. Mary was the sister who had chosen the better part: religion ceased and slept until Mary arose a virgin in Israel, and with the mother of God Mary might sing, 'Behold, from henceforth all generations shall call me blessed.'

An ecclesiastical
tournament.

The trumpet having thus sounded, the lists were drawn for the combat; the bishops sat in their

* 1 Mary, cap. 1.

robes, the clergy stood bareheaded, and the champions appeared. Hugh Weston, Dean of Windsor, Dean of Westminster afterwards, Dr. Watson, Dr. Moreman, and the preacher Harpsfeld undertook to defend the real presence against Phillips Dean of Rochester, Philpot, Cheny, Aylmer, and Young.

CH. 30.
A.D. 1553.
October.

The engagement lasted for a week. The reforming theologians fought for their dangerous cause bravely and temperately; and Weston, who was at once advocate and prolocutor, threw down his truncheon at last, and told Philpot that he was meeter for Bethlehem than for a company of grave and learned men, and that he should come no more into their house.* The orthodox thus ruled themselves the victors; but beyond the doors of the Convocation House they did not benefit their cause. The dispute, according to Renard, resolved itself, in the opinion of the laity, into scandalous railing and recrimination;† the people were indignant; and the Houses of Parliament, disgusted and dissatisfied, resumed the discussion among themselves, as more competent to conduct it with decency. In eight days the various changes introduced by Edward VI. were argued in the House of Commons, and points were treated of there, said Renard, which a general council could scarcely resolve. At length, by a majority, which exceeded Gardiner's most sanguine hopes, of 350

The discussion assuming a form not unusual in the debates of the clergy,

Is transferred to the House of Commons, and concluded in favour of the mass.

* Report of the Disputation in the Convocation House.—
FOXE, vol. v. p. 395.

† Renard to Charles V., October 28: Rolls House MSS.

CH. 30. against 80, the mass was restored, and the
 A.D. 1553. clergy were required to return to celibacy.*
 October.

Noncon-
formists,
however,
are not to be punished.

Parliament
is against
the Spanish
marriage,

The precipitation with which Somerset, Cranmer, and Northumberland had attempted to carry out the Reformation, was thus followed by a natural recoil. Protestant theology had erected itself into a system of intolerant dogmatism, and had crowded the gaols with prisoners who were guilty of no crime but Nonconformity ; it had now to reap the fruits of its injustice, and was superseded till its teachers had grown wiser. The first parliament of Mary was indeed more Protestant, in the best sense of that word, than the statesmen and divines of Edward. While the House of Commons re-established the Catholic services, they decided, after long consideration, that no punishment should be inflicted on those who declined to attend those services.† There was to be no Pope, no persecution, no restoration of the abbey lands,—resolutions, all of them disagreeable to a reactionary court. On the Spanish marriage both Lords and Commons were equally impracticable. The Catholic noblemen—the Earls of Derby, Shrewsbury, Bath, and Sussex were in the interest of Courtenay. The chancellor had become attached to him in the Tower when they were fellow-prisoners there; and Sir Robert Rochester, Sir Francis Englefield, Sir Edward Waldegrave, the queen's tried and faithful officers of the household,

* Renard to Charles V., November 8 : Rolls House MSS.

† Ibid. December 8.

went with the chancellor. Never, on any subject, was there greater unanimity in England
 than in the disapproval of Philip as a husband for the queen, and, on the 29th of October, the Lower House had a petition in preparation to entreat her to choose from among her subjects.

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
October.

To Courtenay, indeed, Mary might legitimately object. Since his emancipation from the Tower
 he had wandered into folly and debauchery; he was vain and inexperienced, and his insolence was kept in check only by the quality so rare in an Englishman of personal timidity. But to refuse Courtenay was one thing, to fasten her choice
 on the heir of a foreign kingdom was another.

Paget insisted, indeed, that, as the Queen of Scots
 was contracted to the Dauphin, unless England
 could strengthen herself with a connexion of corresponding strength, the union of the French and Scottish crowns was a menace to her liberties.*

Paget alone considering
 the connexion a desirable
 one.

But the argument, though important in itself,
 was powerless against the universal dread of the introduction of a foreign sovereign, and it availed only to provide Mary with an answer to the protests and entreaties of her other ministers.

Perhaps, too, it confirmed her in her obstinacy,
 and allowed her to persuade herself that, in following her own inclination, she was consulting the interests of her subjects. Obstinate, at any rate, she was beyond all reach of persuasion. Once only she wavered, after her resolution was first taken. Some one had told her that, if she mar-

* RENARD.

CH. 30. ried Philip, she would find herself the stepmother
 of a large family of children who had come into the world irregularly. A moral objection she was always willing to recognise. She sent for Renard, and conjured him to tell her whether the prince
 was really the good man which he had described him; Renard assured her that he was the very paragon of the world.

A.D. 1553.
 October.

Mary again
 asks Re-nard if Philip is a good man;

She caught the ambassador's hand.

'Oh!' she exclaimed, 'do you speak as a subject whose duty is to praise his sovereign, or do you speak as a man?'

'Your Majesty may take my life,' he answered,
 'if you find him other than I have told you.'

'Oh that I could but see him!' she said.

And, being satisfied,
 she prays
 for guidance, and believes
 that she has received an answer.

She dismissed Renard gratefully. A few days after she sent for him again, when she was expecting the petition of the House of Commons.
 'Lady Clarence,' one of the queen's attendants, was the only other person present. The holy wafer was in the room on an altar, which she called her protector, her guide, her adviser.* Mary told them
 that she spent her days and nights in tears and prayers before it, imploring God to direct her; and
 as she was speaking her emotions overcame her;
 she flung herself on her knees with Renard and Lady Clarence at her side, and the three together before the altar sang the 'Veni Creator.' The invocation was heard in the breasts from which it was uttered. As the chant died into silence,

* 'Elle l'avoit toujours invoqué comme son protecteur, conducteur, et conseiller.'—Renard to Charles V., October 31: Rolls House MSS.

Mary rose from the ground as if inspired, and announced the divine message. The Prince of Spain was the chosen of Heaven for the virgin queen; if miracles were required to give him to her, there was a stronger than man who would work them; the malice of the world should not keep him from her; she would cherish him and love him, and him alone; and never thenceforward, by a wavering thought, would she give him cause for jealousy.*

CH. 30.
A.D. 1553.
November.

It was true that she had deliberately promised not to do what she was now resolved on doing, but that was no matter.

The Commons' petition was by this time ready, but the agitation of the last scene brought on a palpitation of the heart which for the time enabled the queen to decline to receive it; while Renard assailed the different ministers, and extracted from them their general views on the state of the country, and the measures which should be pursued.

The views
of the English
council.

The Bishop of Winchester he found relaxing in his zeal for Rome, and desiring a solid independent English government, the re-enactment of the six articles, and an Anglican religious tyranny supported by the lords of the old blood. Nobles and people were against the Pope, Gardiner said, and against foreign interference of all sorts; Mary could not marry Philip without a Papal dispensation, which must be kept secret; the country would not tolerate it;† the

Gardiner,
indifferent
to the Pope and disliking
Spain,

* Renard to Charles V., October 31 : Rolls House MSS.

† ' Il faudra obtenir dispense du Pape, pour le parentage, qui ne

CH. 30. French would play into the hands of the heretics, and the Spanish alliance would give them the game; there would be a cry raised that Spanish troops would be introduced to inflict the Pope upon the people by force. If the Emperor desired the friendship of England, he would succeed best by not pressing the connexion too close. Political marriages were dangerous. Cromwell tied Henry VIII. to Anne of Cleves; the marriage lasted a night, and destroyed him and his policy. Let the queen accept the choice of her people, marry Courtenay, send Elizabeth to the Tower, and extirpate heresy with fire and sword.

A.D. 1553.
November.
Desires to establish an independent
persecuting Anglican-
ism.

These were the views of Gardiner, from whom Renard turned next to Paget.

Paget
would let
the queen
marry Philip, but
she must recognise
Elizabeth,
who may marry
Courtenay.

If the queen sent Elizabeth to the Tower, Lord Paget said, her life would not be safe for a day. Paget wished her to be allowed to choose her own husband; but she must first satisfy parliament that she had no intention of tampering with the succession. Should she die without children, the country must not be left exposed to claims from Spain on behalf of Philip, or from France on behalf of the Queen of Scots. His own advice, therefore, was, that Mary should frankly acknowledge her sister as her presumptive successor; Elizabeth might be married to Courtenay, and, in default of heirs of her own body, it might be avowed and understood that those two should be king and queen. Could she make up her mind

*pourra estre publique ains secreta, autrement le peuple se revolteroit, pour l'auctorité du Pape qu'il ne veult admettre et revoir.'— Renard to Charles V., November 9: *Rolls House MSS.

to this course, could she relinquish her dreams of restoring the authority of the Pope, of meddling with the Church lands, and interfering with the liberties of her people, she might rely on the loyalty of the country, and her personal inclinations would not be interfered with.*

CH. 30.
A.D. 1553.
November.

Both the lines of conduct thus sketched were consistent and intelligible, and either might have been successfully followed. But neither the one nor the other satisfied Mary. She would have Philip, she would have the Pope, and she would not recognise her sister. If she insisted on choosing a husband for herself, she felt it would be difficult to refuse her; her object was to surprise the council into committing themselves, and she succeeded. On the 8th of November, when they were in session in a room in the palace, Renard presented Mary in the Emperor's name with a formal offer of Philip's hand, and requested a distinct answer, Yes or no. The queen said she would consult her ministers, and repaired in agitation to the council-room.† Distrusting one another, unprepared for the sudden demand, and unable to consult in her presence, the Lords made some answer, which she interpreted into acquiescence: Mary returned radiant with joy, and told the ambassador that his proposal was accepted.

But Mary will have both Philip and the Pope, and will not recognise Elizabeth.

Nov. 8.

She surprises the council into an ambiguous acquiescence.

A momentary lull followed, during which Thomas Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury,

Lady Jane Grey, Cranmer, and the young Dudleys are tried, and condemned.

* Renard to Charles V., November 4: Rolls House MSS.

† 'Visage intimidé et gestes tremblans.'—Renard to Charles V.: Rolls House MSS.

CH. 30. Lady Jane Grey, Lord Guilford, Lord Ambrose,
A.D. 1553. and Lord Henry Dudley were taken from the Nov. 13. Tower on foot to the Guildhall, and were there tried, found guilty of high treason, and sentenced to die. Lady Jane the queen still intended to spare; the Dudleys she meant to pause upon.
 Cranmer, in a grave, mild letter, explained what his conduct had been with respect to his so-called treason; but his story, creditable to him as it was,
 produced no effect; Cranmer was immediately to be put to death. That was the first intention, though it was found necessary to postpone his fate through a superstitious scruple. The archbishop had received the pallium from Rome, and,
 until degraded by apostolic authority, he could not, according to Catholic rule, be condemned by a secular tribunal. But there was no intention of sparing him at the time of his trial; in a few days, Renard wrote on the 17th of November,
 'the archbishop' will be executed; and Mary, triumphant, as she believed herself, on the question nearest to her heart, had told him that the melancholy which had weighed upon her from childhood was rolling away; she had never yet known the meaning of happiness, and she was about to be rewarded at last.*

Cranmer was to die, but escapes for a time by accident.

The queen declares herself about to be happy.

The struggle had told upon her. She was looking aged and worn,† and her hopes of children,
 if she married, were thought extremely small.
 But she considered that she had won the day,

* Renard to Charles V., November 17: Rolls House MSS.

† 'Fort envieillie et agée.'—NOAILLES.

and was now ready to face the Commons; the House had chafed at the delay: they had talked largely of their intentions; if the queen's answer was unsatisfactory, they would dissolve themselves, they said, and return to their counties. On the 16th of November a message was brought that the Speaker would at last be admitted to the presence. The interview which followed, Mary thus herself described to Renard. The council were present; the Speaker was introduced, and the queen received him standing.

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
November.The Speaker
presents a petition
from the House of Commons
against the
marriage.

In an oration, she said, replete to weariness with fine phrases and historic precedents, the Speaker requested her, in the name of the commonwealth, to marry. The succession was perplexed; the Queen of Scots made pretensions to the crown; and, in the event of her death, a civil war was imminent. Let her Majesty take a husband, therefore, and with God's grace the kingdom would not be long without an heir whose title none would dispute. Yet, in taking a husband, the Speaker said, her Majesty's faithful Commons trusted she would not choose from abroad. A foreign prince had interests of his own which might not be English interests; he would have command of English armies, fleets, and fortresses, and he might betray his trust; he might involve the country in wars; he might make promises and break them; he might carry her Highness away out of the realm; or he might bring up her children in foreign courts and in foreign habits. Let her marry, therefore, one of her own subjects.

CH. 30. The Speaker was so prolix, so tedious, so confused, the queen said—his sentences were so long-drawn and so little to the purpose—that she sate down before he had half finished. When he came to the words ‘Marry a subject,’ she could remain silent no longer.

A.D. 1553.
Nov. 16.
He was, in
the queen's opinion,
tedious.

Replies to addresses of the House of Commons were usually read by the chancellor; but, careless of forms, she again started to her feet, and spoke:—*

The queen
replies
more
briefly.

‘For your desire to see us married we thank you; your desire to dictate to us the consort whom we shall choose we consider somewhat superfluous; the English parliament has not been wont to use such language to their sovereigns, and where private persons in such cases follow their private tastes, sovereigns may reasonably challenge an equal liberty. If you, our Commons, force upon us a husband whom we dislike, it may occasion the inconvenience of our death;† if we marry where we do not love, we shall be in our grave in three months, and the heir of whom you speak will not have been brought into being. We have heard much from you of the incommodities which may attend our marriage; we have not heard from you of the commodities thereof—one of which is of some weight with us, the commodity, namely, of our

* Renard is the only authority for this speech, which he heard from the queen. Translated by him into French, and re-translated by myself into English, it has,

doubtless, suffered much in the process.

† ‘Ce seroit procurer l'inconvenient de sa mort.’

private inclination. We have not forgotten our coronation oath. We shall marry as God shall direct our choice, to his honour and to our country's good.'

CH. 30.
A.D. 1553.
Nov. 16.

She would hear no reply. The Speaker was led out, and as he left the room Arundel whispered to Gardiner that he had lost his office; the queen had usurped it. At the same moment the queen herself turned to the chancellor—'I have to thank you, my Lord, for this business,' she said.

The chancellor swore in tears that he was innocent; the Commons had drawn their petition themselves; for himself it was true he was well inclined towards Courtenay; he had known him in the Tower.

'And is your having known him in the Tower,' she cried, 'a reason that you should think him a fitting husband for me. I will never, never marry him—that I promise you—and I am a woman of my word; what I say I do.'

'Choose where you will,' Gardiner answered, 'your Majesty's consort shall find in me the most obedient of his subjects.'

Mary had now the bit between her teeth, and, resisting all efforts to check or guide her, was making her own way with obstinate resolution.

The next point was the succession, which, notwithstanding the humour of parliament, should be re-arranged, if force or skill could do it. There were four possible claimants after herself she told Renard, and in her own opinion the best title was that of the Queen of Scots. But the country

The queen
desires to alter the succession.

CH. 30. objected, and the Emperor would not have the English crown fall to France. The Greys were out of the question, but their mother, the Duchess of Suffolk, was eligible; and there was Lady Lennox, also, Darnley's mother, who perhaps, after all, would be the best choice that could be made.* Elizabeth, she was determined, should never, never succeed. She had spoken to Paget about it, she said, and Paget had remonstrated; Paget had said marry her to Courtenay, recognise her as presumptive heir, and add a stipulation, if necessary, that she become a Catholic; but, Catholic or no Catholic, she said, her sister should never reign in England with consent of hers; she was a heretic, a hypocrite, and a bastard, and her infamous mother had been the cause of all the calamities which had befallen the realm.

A.D. 1553.
November.
She prefers
Lady Lennox to the other competitors.

Elizabeth
shall never reign with consent of hers.

Even Renard was alarmed at this burst of passion. He had fed Mary's suspicions till they were beyond either his control or her own; and the attitude of parliament had lately shown him that, if any step were taken against Elizabeth without provocation on her part, it would infinitely increase the difficulty of concluding the marriage. He was beginning to believe, and he ventured to hint to the queen, that Paget's advice might be worth consideration; but on this subject she would listen to nothing.

Elizabeth had hitherto, when at court, taken precedence of all other ladies. The queen now compelled her to walk behind Lady Lennox and the Duchess of Suffolk, as a sign of the meditated change;* and the ladies of the court were afraid to be seen speaking to her. But in reply to Mary's derogatory treatment, the young lords, knights, and gentlemen gathered ostentatiously round the princess when she rode abroad, or thronged the levees at her house; old-established statesmen said, in Renard's ear, that, let the queen decide as she would, no foreigner should reign in England; and Lord Arundel believed that Elizabeth's foot was already on the steps of the throne. A large and fast-growing party, which included more than one member of the Privy Council, were now beginning to consider, as the best escape from Philip, that Courtenay had better fly from the court, taking Elizabeth with him—call round him in their joint names all who would strike with him for English independence, and proclaim the queen deposed.

* Renard to Charles V., November 28: Rolls House MSS.

CH. 30.

A.D. 1553.
November.
Elizabeth
is deprived of her precedence
at the court;

To which
the country
replies with demonstrations in her favour.

Projects
begin to rise for de-posing the
queen.

There was uncertainty about Elizabeth herself; both Noailles and Renard believed that she would consent to this dangerous proposal; but she had shown Courtenay, hitherto, no sign of favour; while Courtenay, on his side, complained that he was frightened by her haughty ways. Again there was a serious difficulty in Courtenay's character; he was too cowardly for a dangerous enterprise, too incapable for an intricate one, and his weak humour made men afraid to trust themselves

* 'Elle l'a faict quelquefois aller apres la Comtesse de Lennox, que l'on appelle icy Madame Marguerite, et Madame Francoise, qu'est la susdict Duchesse de Suffolk.'—Noailles to the King of France, November 30.

CH. 30. to a person who, to save himself, might at any
 A.D. 1553. moment betray them. Noailles, however, said November. emphatically that, were Courtenay anything but what he was, his success would be certain.*

Courtenay
to fly with Elizabeth
to the western counties.

Parliament
is dissolved.

The plot grew steadily into definite form. Devonshire and Cornwall were prepared for insurrection, and thither, as to the stronghold of the Courtenay family, Elizabeth was to be first carried. Meantime the ferment of popular feeling showed in alarming symptoms through the surface. The council were in continual quarrel. Parliament, since the rebuff of the Speaker, had not grown more tractable, and awkward questions began to be asked about a provision for the married clergy. All had been already gained which could be hoped for from the present House of Commons; and, on the 6th of December, the session ended in a dissolution. The same day a dead dog was thrown through the window of the presence chamber with ears cropped, a halter about its neck, and a label saying that all the priests in England should be hanged.

Renard insists that Elizabeth
shall be treated with courtesy, to throw her off her
guard.

Renard, who, though not admitted, like Noailles, into the confidence of the conspirators, yet knew the drift of public feeling, and knew also Arundel's opinion of the queen's prospects, insisted that Mary should place some restraint upon herself, and treat her sister at least with outward courtesy; Philip was expected at Christmas, should nothing untoward happen in the interval; and the ambassador prevailed on her, at last, to pretend that her suspicions were at an end. His own desire,

* Noailles to the King of France, December 6.

he said, was as great as Mary's that Elizabeth should be detected in some treasonable correspondence; but harshness only placed her on her guard; she would be less careful, if she believed that she was no longer distrusted. The princess, alarmed perhaps at finding herself the unconsenting object of dangerous schemes, had asked permission to retire to her country house. It was agreed that she should go; persons in her household were bribed to watch her; and the queen, yielding to Renard's entreaties, received her when she came to take leave, with an appearance of affection so well counterfeited, that it called out the ambassador's applause.* She made her a present of pearls, with a head-dress of sable; and the princess, on her side, implored the queen to give no more credit to slanders against her. They embraced; Elizabeth left the court; and, as she went out of London, five hundred gentlemen formed about her as a voluntary escort.† There were not wanting fools, says Renard, who would persuade the queen that her sister's last words were honestly spoken; but she remembers too acutely the injuries which her mother and herself suffered at Anne Boleyn's hands; and she has a fixed conviction that Elizabeth, unless she can be first disposed of, will be a cause of infinite calamities to the realm.‡

См. 30.

A.D. 1553.
December.

Elizabeth withdraws from the court. The queen pretends a return of affection,

But determines to destroy her, if possible.

* 'La Reine a tres bien dissimulée, en son endroict.'—Renard to Charles V., December 8: Rolls House MSS.

† NOAILLES.

‡ Renard to Charles V., December 8: Rolls House MSS.

CHAPTER XXXI.

THE SPANISH MARRIAGE.

CH. 31.
A.D. 1553.
December.

The Catholic gentlemen, who dislike the marriage, durst not oppose it by force,

For fear of playing into the hands of the Reformers.

THE fears of Renard and the hopes of Noailles were occasioned by the unanimity of Catholics and heretics in the opposition to the marriage; yet, so singular was the position of parties, that this very unanimity was the condition which made the marriage possible. The Catholic lords and gentlemen were jealous of English independence, and, had they stood alone, they would have coerced the queen into an abandonment of her intentions: but, if they dreaded a Spanish sovereign, they hated unorthodoxy more, and if they permitted, or assisted in the schemes of the Reformers, they feared that they might lose the control of the situation when the immediate object was obtained. Those who were under the influence of Gardiner desired to restore persecution; and persecution, which was difficult with Mary on the throne, would be impossible under a sovereign brought in by a revolution. They made a favourite of Courtenay, but they desired to marry him to the queen, not to Elizabeth: Gardiner told the young earl that he would sooner see him the husband of the vilest drab who could be picked out of the London kennels.* CH. 31.

Thus, from their murmurs, they seemed to be on the edge of rebellion; yet, when the point of action came, they halted, uncertain what to do, unwilling to acquiesce, yet without resolution to resist. From a modern point of view the wisest policy was that recommended by Paget. The claim of the Queen of Scots on the throne unquestionably made it prudent for England to strengthen herself by some powerful foreign alliance; sufficient precautions could be devised for the security of the national independence; and, so far from England being in danger of being drawn into the war on the Continent, Lord Paget said that, if England would accept Philip heartily, the war would be at an end. Elizabeth of France might marry Don Carlos, taking with her the French pretensions to Naples and Milan as a dowry. Another French princess might be given to the expatriated Philibert, and Savoy and Piedmont restored with her. 'You,' Paget said to Noailles, 'by your Dauphin's marriage forced us to be friends with the Scots; we, by our queen's marriage, will force you to be friends with the Emperor.' †

A.D. 1553.
December.

Paget's moderate policy can find no favour.

Paget, however, was detested as an upstart, and detested still more as a latitudinarian; he

* Renard to Charles V.: Rolls House MSS.

† 'Le dict Paget me respondict qu'il n'estoit ja besoing d'entrer en si grande jalousie, et que tout ainsi que nous les avions faicts amys avecques les Escos-

soys, ce mariage seroit aussy cause que nous serions amys avecques l'Empereur.'—Noailles to the King of France, December 26. Compare also the letter of December 23, Ambassades, vol. ii. pp. 334–356.

CH. 31. could form no party, and the queen made use of him only to support her in her choice of the Prince of Spain, as in turn she would use Gardiner to destroy the Protestants; and thus the two great factions in the State neutralized each other's action in a matter in which both were equally anxious; and Mary, although with no remarkable capacity, without friends and ruined, if at any moment she lost courage, was able to go her own way in spite of her subjects.

A.D. 1553.
 December.

Conflicting
 parties neutralize each other; and
 the queen
 can go her
 own way.

Pole is displeased
 that the interests of
 the Church
 should be postponed
 to the marriage.

The uncertainty was, how long so anomalous
 a state of things would continue. The marriage, being once decided on, Mary could think of nothing
 else, and even religion sank into the second place.
 Reginald Pole, chafing the Imperial bridle between his lips, vexed her, so Renard said, from day to day,
 with his untimely importunities;* the restoration of the mass gave him no pleasure so long as the papal legate was an exile; and in vain the queen
 laboured to draw from him some kind of approval.
 He saw her only preferring carnal pleasures to her duty to Heaven; and, indifferent himself to all interests, save those of the See of Rome, he was irritated with the Emperor, irritated with the worldly schemes to which he believed that his mission had been sacrificed. He talked angrily of the marriage. The queen heard through Wotton the ambassador at Paris, that he had said openly, it should never take place; † while Peto, the Green-

* Renard to Charles V., November 14, November 28, December 3, December 8, December 11: Rolls House MSS.

† Renard to Charles V.: Rolls House MSS. The queen wrote to Wotton to learn his authority. The Venetian amwich friar, who was in his train, wrote to her, CH. 31.

reflecting impolitely on her age and adding scripture commendations of celibacy as the more perfect state.* It was even feared that the impatient legate had advised the Pope to withhold the dispensations.

A.D. 1553.
December.

Mary, beyond measure afflicted, wrote to Pole
at last, asking what in his opinion she ought to do. He sent his answer through a priest, by whom it could be conveyed with the greatest emphasis. First, he said, she must pray to God for a spirit of counsel and fortitude; next, she must, at all hazards, relinquish the name of Head of the Church; and, since she could trust neither peer nor prelate, she must recal parliament, go in person to the House of Commons, and demand permission with her own mouth for himself to return to England. The Holy See was represented in his person, and was freshly insulted in the refusal to receive him; the Pope's vast clemency had volunteered unasked to pardon the crimes of England; if the gracious offer was not accepted, the legacy would be cancelled, the national guilt would be infinitely enhanced.

He advises
the queen
to recal
parliament, and entreat in person for the reception of the legate.

bassador, Wotton said, was the person who had told him; but the quarter from which the information originally came, he believed, might be relied on.—Wot-
ton to the Queen and Council:
MS. State Paper Office.

* 'Un des principaulx qu'il a avec luy que se nomme William Peto, theologien, luy a escript
luy donnant conseil de non se

marrier, et vivre en celibat; mes-lant en ses lettres plusieurs allegations du Vieux et Nouveau Testament, repetant x ou xii
fois qu'elle tombera en la puissance et servitude du mari, qu'elle
n'aura enfans, sinon soubz danger
de sa vie pour l'âge dont elle est.'
—Renard to Charles V.: TYTLER,
vol. ii. p. 503.

CH. 31. The Emperor talked of prudence; in the service of God prudence was madness; and, so long as the schism continued, her attempts at reform were vanity, and her seat upon the throne was usurpation. Let her tell the truth to the House of Commons, and the House of Commons would hear.*

A.D. 1553.
December.

The Emperor and the Pope agree that Pole is not wise, and must be kept at a distance till after the marriage.

‘Your Majesty will see,’ wrote Renard, enclosing to Charles a copy of these advices, ‘the extent of the Cardinal’s discretion, and how necessary it is that for the present he be kept at a distance.’ The Pope was not likely to reject the submission of England at any moment, late or early, when England might be pleased to offer it, and could well afford to wait. Julius was wiser than his legate. Pole was not recalled, but exhorted to patience, and a letter or message from Rome cooled Mary’s anxieties. Meanwhile the marriage was to be expedited with as much speed as possible; the longer the agitation continued, the greater the danger; while the winter was unfavourable to revolutionary movements, and armed resistance to the prince’s landing would be unlikely so long as the season prevented large bodies of men from keeping the field.†

The Emperor, therefore, in the beginning of December, sent over the draft of a marriage treaty; and if the security that the articles would be observed had equalled the form in which they were conceived, the English might have afforded to lay aside their alarms. Charles CH. 31.

* Instructions of Cardinal Pole to Thomas Goldwell: Cotton. MSS. Titus, B. 11.

† Renard dwelt much on this point as a reason for haste.

seemed to have anticipated almost every point on which the insular jealousy would be sensitive. The A.D. 1553.
Prince of Spain should bear the title of King of December.
England so long, but so long only as the queen The Em-should be alive; and the queen should retain the peror sends disposal of all affairs in the realm, and the ad- a draft of ministration of the revenues. The queen, in re- the mar-turn, should share Philip's titles, present and riage artiprospective, with the large settlement of 60,000l. cles.
a year upon her for her life. Don Carlos, the prince's child by his first wife, would, if he lived, inherit Spain, Sicily, the Italian provinces, and the Indies. But Burgundy and the Low Countries should be settled on the offspring of the English marriage, and be annexed to the English crown; and this prospect, splendid in itself, was made more magnificent by the possibility that Don Carlos might die. Under all contingencies, the laws and liberties of the several countries
should be held inviolate and inviolable.

In such a treaty the Emperor conferred everything, and in return received nothing; and yet,
to gain the alliance, a negotiation already commenced for the hand of the Infanta of Portugal was relinquished. The liberality of the proposals was suspicious, but they were submitted to the council, who, unable to refuse to consider them,
were obliged to admit that they were reasonable.
Five additional clauses were added, however, to The Eng-
which it was insisted that Philip should swear lish add
before the contract should be completed— five clauses,
to which
Philip
must swear.

1. That no foreigner, under any circumstances,

CH. 31. should be admitted to any office in the royal household, in the army, the forts, or the fleet.

A.D. 1553.
December.

2. That the queen should not be taken abroad without her own consent; and that the children—should children be born—should not be carried out of England without consent of Parliament, even though among them might be the heir of the Spanish empire.

3. Should the queen die childless, the prince's connexion with the realm should be at an end.

4. The jewel-house and treasury should be wholly under English control, and the ships of war should not be removed into a foreign port.

5. The prince should maintain the existing treaties between England and France; and England should not be involved, directly or indirectly, in the war between France and the Empire.*

These demands were transmitted to Brussels, where they were accepted without difficulty, and further objection could not be ventured unless constraint was laid upon the queen. The sketch of the treaty, with the conditions attached to it, was submitted to such of the Lords and Commons as remained in London after the dissolution of Parliament, and the result was a sullen acquiescence.

The Emperor consents, and the English council suddenly agree to the marriage.

An embassy was immediately announced as to be sent from Flanders. Count Egmont, M. de Courières, the Count de Lalaing, and M. de Nigry, Chancellor of the Golden Fleece, were coming over as plenipotentiaries of the Emperor. Secret messengers went off to Rome to hasten the dispensations—a dispensation for Mary to marry her cousin, and a dispensation which also was found necessary permitting the ceremony to be performed by a bishop in a state of schism. The marriage could be solemnized at once on their arrival, the ambassadors standing as Philip's representatives, while Sir Philip Hoby, Bonner, Bedford, and Lord Derby would go to Spain to receive the prince's oaths, and escort him to England. Again and again the queen pressed haste. Ash-Wednesday fell on the 6th of February, and in Lent she might not marry. Renard assured her that the prince should be in her arms before Septuagesima, and all her trials would be over. The worst danger which he now anticipated was from some unpleasant collision which might arise after the prince's landing; and he had advised the Emperor to have the Spaniards who would form the retinue selected for their meekness. They would meet with insolence from the English, which they would not endure, if they had the spirit to resent it; their dispositions, therefore, must be mild and forgiving.*

* Marriage Treaty between Mary, Queen of England, and Philip of Spain: RYMER, vol. vi.

CH. 31.

A.D. 1553.
December.
Dispensa-
tions are sent for
from Rome,
and the queen
presses
haste.

Renard
makes suggestions on the composition of Philip's
retinue.

And yet Renard could not hide from himself, and the Lords did not hide from Mary, that their consent was passive only; that their reluctance was vehement as ever. Bedford said, if he went to Spain, he must go without attendants, for no one would accompany him. Lord Derby refused

England is reluctant
as ever,
notwithstanding.

* Renard to Charles V., December 11 : Rolls House MSS.

CH. 31.

A.D. 1553.
December.The language of
the people
is menac-
ing;

to be one of the ambassadors, and with Sir Edward Waldegrave and Sir Edward Hastings told the queen that he would leave her service if she persisted. The seditious pamphlets which were scattered everywhere created a vague terror in the court, and the court ladies wept and lamented in the queen's presence. The council in a body again urged her to abandon her intention. The peers met again to consider the marriage articles. Gardiner read them aloud, and Lord Windsor, a dull Brutus, who till then had never been known to utter a reasonable word, exclaimed, amidst general applause, 'You have told us fine things of the queen, and the prince, and the Emperor; what security have we that words are more than words?' Corsairs from Brest and Rochelle hovered in the mouth of the Channel to catch the couriers going to and fro between Spain and London and Brussels, and to terrify Philip with the danger of the passage. The Duke of Suffolk's brother and the Marquis of Winchester had been heard to swear that they would set upon him when he landed; and Renard began to doubt whether the alliance, after all, was worth the risk attending it.* Mary, however, brave in the midst of her perplexities, vowed that she would relinquish her hopes of Philip only with her life. An army of spies

* 'The English,' he said, 'sont si traictres, si inconstantes, si doubles, si malicieux, et si faciles à esmover qu'il ne se fault fier; et si l'alliance est grande, aussi

est elle hazardeuse pour la personne de son Altesse.'—Renard to Charles V., December 12: Rolls House MSS.

watched Elizabeth day and night, and the Emperor, undeterred by Renard's hesitation, encouraged the queen's resolution. There could be no conspiracy as yet, Charles said, which could not be checked with judicious firmness; and dangerous persons could be arrested and made secure.
 A strong hand could do much in England, as was proved by the success for a time of the late Duke of Northumberland.*

CH. 31.

A.D. 1553.
 December.

The advice fell in with Mary's own temperament; she had already been acting in the spirit of
 it. A party of Protestants met in St. Matthew's Church on the publication of the acts of the late session, to determine how far they would obey them. Ten or twelve were seized on the spot, and two were hanged out of hand.† The queen
 told Hastings and Waldegrave that she would endure no opposition; they should obey her, or they should leave the council. She would raise a few thousand men, she said, to keep her subjects
 in order, and she would have a thousand Flemish horse among them. There was a difficulty about ways and means; as fast as money came into the treasury she had paid debts with it, and, as far as her means extended, she had replaced chalices and roods in the parish churches. But, if she was poor, five millions of gold had just arrived in Spain from the New World; and, as the Emperor suggested, her credit was good at Antwerp from her honesty. Lazarus Tucker came again to the

But the queen and the Emperor will persevere.

The queen
 will raise money, and raise a force to keep her subjects in order.

* Charles V. to Renard, December 24: Rolls House MSS.

† Renard to Charles V., December 20: Ibid.

CH. 31. rescue. In November, Lazarus provided 50,000*l.*
 A.D. 1553. for her at fourteen per cent. In January she December. required 100,000*l.* more, and she ordered Gresham to find it for her at low interest or high.*
 Fortunately for Mary the project of a standing
 army could not be carried out by herself alone,
 and the passive resistance of the council saved
 her from commencing the attempt. Neither Irish mercenaries, nor Flemish, nor Welsh,
 as, two months after she was proposing to herself, were permitted to irritate England into madness.

Count Eg-
 mont arrives at Calais, and crosses the Channel.

While Mary was thus buffeting with the waves,
 on the 23rd, Count Egmont and his three companions arrived at Calais. The French had threatened to intercept the passage, and four English ships-of-war had been ordered to be in waiting as their escort : these ships, however, had not left the Thames, being detained either by weather, as the admiral pretended, or by the ill-humour of the crews, who swore they would give the French cruisers small trouble, should they present themselves.† On Christmas-day ill-looking vessels were hanging in mid-channel, off Calais harbour, but the ambassadors were resolved to cross at all risks. They stole over in the darkness on the night of the 26th, and were at Dover by nine in the morning. Their retinue, a very large one, was sent on at once to London; snow was

* The Queen to Sir Thomas Gresham : Flanders MSS. Mary,
 State Paper Office.

† Noailles to the King of France, December 6 : Ambassades,
 vol. ii.

on the ground, and the boys in the streets saluted the first comers with showers of balls. The ambassadors followed the next day, and were received in silence, but without active insult. The Emperor's choice of persons for his purpose had been judicious. The English ministers intended to be offensive, but they were disarmed by the courtesy of Egmont, who charmed every one. In ten days the business connected with the treaty was concluded. The treaty itself was sent to Brussels to be ratified, and the dispensations from Rome, and the necessary powers from the Prince of Spain, were alone waited for that the marriage might be concluded in public or in private, whichever way would be most expeditious. The queen cared only for the completion of the irrevocable ceremony, which would bring her husband to her side before Lent.*

CH. 31.

A.D. 1553.
December.

The treaty is concluded, and the queen is to be married by proxy.

The interval of delay was consumed in hunting-parties† and dinners at the palace, where the courtiers played off before the guests the passions of their eager mistress.‡ The enemies of the mar-

* The Bishop of Arras to the Ambassadors in England: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv. p. 181, &c.

† The 10th day of January the ambassadors rode unto Hampton Court, and there they had as great cheer as could be had, and hunted and killed, tag and rag, with hounds and swords.—MACHYN's Diary.

‡ After dinner Lord William Howard entered, and, seeing the queen pensive, whispered something to her in English; then turning to us, he asked if we knew what he had said? The queen bade him not tell, but he paid no attention to her. He told us he had said he hoped soon to see somebody sitting there, pointing to the chair next her Majesty. The queen blushed, and asked him how he could say so. He answered that he knew very well she liked it; whereat her Majesty laughed, and the court laughed, &c.—Egmont and Renard to Charles V: Rolls House MSS.

CH. 31. riage, French and English, had no time to
 A.D. 1554. lose, if they intended to prevent the completion
 Jan. 10. of it.

The French
 court propose that a new treaty
 shall be concluded with England to provide for unforeseen contingencies.

When the queen's design was first publicly announced, the King of France directed Noailles to tell her frankly the alarm with which it was regarded at Paris. Henry and Montmorency said
 the same repeatedly, and at great length, to Dr.
 Wotton. The queen might have the best intentions of remaining at peace, but events might be too strong for her; and they suggested, at last,
 that she might give a proof of the good-will
 which she professed by making a fresh treaty
 with them.* That a country should be at peace
 while its titular king was at war, was a situation without a precedent. Intricate questions were certain to arise; for instance, if a mixed fleet of English and Spanish ships should escort the prince, or convoy his transports or treasure, or if English ships having Spaniards on board, should enter French harbours. A thousand difficulties
 such as these might occur, and it would be wise
 to provide for them beforehand.

The queen
 refuses.

The uneasiness of the court of Paris was not allayed when the queen met this most reasonable proposal with a refusal.† A clause, she replied,
 was added to the marriage articles for the maintenance of the existing treaties with France, and with that and with her own promises the French government ought to be content. In vain Noailles pointed out that the existing treaties would not

* NOAILLES.

† Ibid.

meet the new conditions; she was obstinate, and both Noailles and the King of France placed the worst interpretation upon her attitude. Philip, after his arrival, would unquestionably drag or lead her into his quarrels; and they determined, therefore, to employ all means, secret and open, to prevent his coming, and to co-operate with the English opposition.

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
January.

The time to act had arrived. Rumours were industriously circulated that the Prince of Spain was already on the seas, bringing with him ten thousand Spaniards, who were to be landed at the Tower, and that eight thousand Germans were to follow from the Low Countries. Noailles and M. d'Oysel, then on his way through London to Scotland, had an interview with a number of lords and gentlemen, who undertook to place themselves at the head of an insurrection, and to depose the queen. The whole country was crying out against her, and the French ministers believed that the opposition had but to declare itself in arms to meet with universal sympathy. They regarded the persons with whom they were dealing as the representatives of the national discontent; but on this last point they were fatally mistaken.

The French
ambassadors communicate
with the disaffected
gentlemen
in London.

Noailles spoke generally of lords and gentlemen; but those with whom d'Oysel and himself had communicated were a party of ten or twelve of the pardoned friends of the Duke of Northumberland, or of men otherwise notorious among the ultra-Protestants; the Duke of Suffolk and his three brothers, Lord Thomas, Lord John, and Lord Leonard Grey; the Marquis of Northampton;

The composition of
the conspiracy,
however,
is not a promising
one.

CH. 31. Sir Thomas Wyatt, son of the poet; Sir Nicholas Throgmorton; Sir Peter Carew; Sir Edmund Warner; Lord Cobham's brother-in-law; and Sir James Crofts, the late Deputy of Ireland.* Courtenay, who had affected orthodoxy as long as he had hopes of the queen, was admitted into the confederacy. Cornwall and Devonshire were to be the first counties to rise, where Courtenay would be all-powerful by his name. Wyatt undertook to raise Kent, Sir James Crofts the Severn border, Suffolk and his brothers the midland counties. Forces from these four points were to converge on London, which would then stir for itself. The French Admiral Villegaignon promised to keep a fleet on the seas, and to move from place to place among the western English harbours, wherever his presence would be most useful. Plymouth had been tampered with, and the mayor and aldermen, either really, or as a ruse to gain information, affected a desire to receive a French garrison.† For the sake of their cause the Protestant party were prepared to give to France an influence in England as objectionable in itself, and as offensive to the majority

Plans are laid for a general rising, in which France is to assist.

* Noailles and d'Oysel to the King of France, January 15: Ambassades, vol. iii.

† 'Sire, tout maintenant en achevant cette lettre, les maire et aldermans de Plymouth, m'ont envoyé prier de vous supplier les vouloir prendre en votre protection, voulans et deliberans mettre leur ville entre vos mains, et y recevoir dedans telle garrison

qu'il vous plaira y envoyer; s'estans resoubz de ne recevoir aulcunement le Prince d'Espagne, ne s'asservir en façon que ce soit à ses commandemens, et s'asseurans que tous les gentilzhommes de l'entour d'icy en feroient de mesme.'—Noailles to the King of France: Ambassades, vol. ii. p. 342.

of the people, as the influence of Spain; and the management of the opposition to the queen was snatched from the hands of those who might have brought it to some tolerable issue, by a set of men to whom the Spanish marriage was but the stalking-horse for the reimposition of their late tyranny. If the Duke of Northumberland, instead of setting up a rival to Mary, had loyally admitted her to the throne which was her right, he might have tied her hands, and secured the progress of moderate reform. Had the great patriotic anti-papal party been now able to combine, with no disintegrating element, they could have prevented the marriage or made it harmless. But the ultra-party plunged again into treason, in which they would succeed only to restore the dominion of a narrow and blighting sectarianism.*

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
January.

The ultra-Protestants were not acting wisely.

The conspirators remained in London till the second week in January. Wyatt went into Kent, Peter Carew ran down the Channel to Exmouth in a vessel of his own, and sent relays of horses as far as Andover for Courtenay, Sir Nicholas Throgmorton undertaking to see the latter thus far upon his way. The disaffection was already simmering in Devonshire. There was a violent scene among the magistrates at the Christmas quarter-sessions at Exeter. A countryman came

The conspirators separate to execute their intentions.

Symptoms of disturbance show themselves at Exeter.

* One of the projects mooted was the queen's murder; a scheme suggested by a man from whom better things might have been expected, William Thomas, the late Clerk of the Council. Wyatt, however, would not stain the cause with dark crimes of that kind, and threatened Thomas with rough handling for his proposal.

CH. 31. in, and reported that he had been waylaid and
 A.D. 1554. searched by a party of strange horsemen in steel January. saddles, 'under the gallows at the hill top,' at Fair-mile, near Sir Peter Carew's house. His person had been mistaken, it seemed, but questions were asked, inquiries made, and ugly language had been used about the queen. On Carew's arrival the ferment increased. One of his lacqueys, mistaking intention for fact, whispered
 in Exeter that 'my Lord of Devonshire was at Mohun's Ottery.*' Six horses heavily loaded passed in, at midnight, through the city gates.
 The panniers were filled with harness and handguns from Sir Peter's castle at Dartmouth.† Sir
 John Chichester, Sir Arthur Champernowne,
 Peter and Gawen Carew, and Gybbes of Silverton,
 had met in private, rumour said for no good purpose; and the Exeter Catholics were anxious and agitated. They had been all disarmed after the insurrection of 1549, the castle was in ruins, the city walls were falling down. Should Courtenay come, the worst consequences were anticipated.

The first embarrassments are created by Lord
 Courtenay,

But Courtenay did not come. After Carew had left London, he became nervous; when the horses were reported to be ready, he lingered
 about the court; he flattered himself that the queen had changed her mind in his favour; and two nights before the completion of the treaty he sate up, affecting to expect to be sent for to

* The house of Sir Peter Carew. | on the State of Devonshire:
MS. Domestic, Mary, vol. ii.

† Miscellaneous Depositions | State Paper Office.

marry her on the spot.* Finding the message did not arrive, he gave an order to his tailor to prepare a splendid court costume, adding perhaps some boasting words, which were carried to Gardiner. The chancellor's regard for him was sincere, and went beyond a desire to make him politically useful. He sent for him, cross-questioned him, and by the influence of a strong mind over a weak one, drew out as much as Courtenay knew of the secrets of the plot.†

CH. 31.
A. D. 1554.
January.
Who reveals the conspiracy to Gardiner.

The intention was to delay, if possible, an open declaration of rebellion a few weeks longer—till the Prince of Spain's arrival should raise the ferment to boiling point. Gardiner, who was determined, at all events, to prevent the Protestants from making head, informed the queen, without mentioning Courtenay's name, that he had cause to suspect Sir Peter Carew. A summons was despatched to Devonshire to require Sir Peter and his brother to return to London; and thus either to compel them to rise prematurely, without Courtenay's assistance, or, if they complied, to enable the court to secure their persons. The desired effect was produced; Carew had waded too deep in treason to trust himself in Gardiner's hands. He wrote an excuse, yet protesting his loyalty; and he invited the inhabitants of Exeter to join in a petition to the Crown against the marriage, as a first step towards a rising.

Sir Peter Carew attempts to raise Exeter;

But the Carews were notorious and unpopular;

* Instructions to la Marque: NOAILLES, vol. iii. p. 25, &c.

† Noailles to the King of France: Ambassades, vol. iii. p. 31.

CH. 31. the justices of the peace at the sessions had been just occupied with a Protestant outrage committed by one of their nearest friends,* and their true object was suspected. The barns of Crediton were not forgotten, nor the massacre of the prisoners at Clyst, and without Courtenay they were powerless. Their invitation met with no response; and Chichester and Champernowne, seeing how the tide was setting, washed their hands of the connexion. Sir Thomas Dennys, a Catholic gentleman of the county, took command of Exeter, sent express for the sheriff, Sir Richard Edgecumbe, of Cotteyll, to come to his help, and as well as he could he put the city in a state of defence.† Carew retired to Mohun's Ottery, when an order came to Dennys from the court for his arrest.

A.D. 1554.
January.
But Carew,
being unpopular and suspected,
fails,

And, to escape arrest, flies to France.

Dennys, who desired Carew's escape more than his capture, replied that for the moment he could not execute the order. Mohun's Ottery could not be taken without cannon, and wet weather had made the roads impassable. Meantime he gave Sir Peter notice of his danger; and Sir Peter, disposing in haste of his farm stock to raise a supply of money, crossed the country to

* 'On the morning of Christmas-day came twelve neighbours of Silverton, being the parish where Mr. Gybbes dwelleth, and they complained to me of a cross of latten, and of an altar-cloth stolen out of the church before that time; and that the cross was set up upon a gate or upon a hedge by the way, where the picture of Christ was dressed with a paste or such like tyre, and the picture of our Lady and St. John tied by threads to the arms of the cross, like thieves.' 'Mr. Gybbes,' could not be actually convicted of having been the perpetrator, but he was 'vehemently suspected,' and, when examined, had used 'vile words.' —Depositions of John Prideaux: MS. Mary, Domestic, vol. ii. State Paper Office.

† Ibid.

Weymouth, embarked in a vessel which 'Mr. Walter Raleigh' had brought round to meet him, and sailed for France.*

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
January.

One arm of the conspiracy was thus lopped off at the first blow. But, although Courtenay's treachery was known, some days elapsed before the ill success of Carew was heard of in London. Courtenay had been trusted only so far as his intended share in the action had made it necessary to trust him, and the confederates were chiefly anxious that, having broken down, he should be incapacitated from doing further mischief by being restored to the Tower. Courtenay, wrote Noailles, has thrown away his chance of greatness, and will now probably die miserably. Lord Thomas Grey was heard to say that, as Courtenay had proved treacherous, he would take his place, and run his chance for the crown or the scaffold.†

The conspirators, however, resolve to persevere.

They would, perhaps, have still delayed till they had received authentic accounts from Devonshire; but the arrest of Sir Edmund Warner, and one or two others, assured them that too much of their projects had transpired; and on the 22nd of January Sir Thomas Wyatt called a meeting of his friends at Allingham Castle, on the Medway. The commons of Kent were the same brave, violent, and inflammable people whom John Cade, a century before, had led to London; the country gentlemen were generally under Wyatt's

Jan. 22.

Sir Thomas Wyatt calls a meeting at Allingham Castle,

* Depositions of John Prideaux: MS. Mary, Domestic, vol. ii. State Paper Office.

† NOAILLES.

CH. 31. influence. Sir R. Southwell, the sheriff for the
 A.D. 1554. year, had been among the loudest objectors in Jan. 22. parliament to the marriage; and if Southwell joined in the rising, he would bring with him
 Lord Abergavenny.* Lord Cobham, Wyatt's
 uncle, was known to wish him well. Sir Thomas Cheyne, the only other person of weight in the county, would be loyal to the queen, but Wyatt had tampered with his tenants; Cheyne could bring a thousand men into the field, but they would desert when led out, and there was nothing to fear
 from them. Whether Southwell and Cobham would act openly on Wyatt's side was the chief uncertainty; it was feared that Southwell might desire to keep within the limits of loyal opposition; Cobham offered to send his sons, but 'the sending of sons,' some member of the meeting said, 'was the casting away of the Duke of Northumberland; their lives were as dear to them as my Lord Cobham's was to him; let him come himself and set his foot by them.'† The result of the conference was a determination to make the venture. Thursday the 25th was the day agreed on for the rising, and the gentlemen
 present went in their several directions to prepare
 the people.

And the day of the rising is fixed.

Meantime Gardiner was following the track which Courtenay had opened. He knew generally the leaders of the conspiracy, yet uncertain,
 in the universal perplexity, how any one would

* Confession of Anthony Norton: MS. Mary, Domestic, vol. iii.
 State Paper Office.

† Ibid.

act, he knew not whom to trust. To send Courtenay out of the way, he allowed a project to be set on foot for despatching him on an embassy to Brussels; and anxious, perhaps, not to alarm Mary too much, he simply told her what she and Renard knew already, that treasonable designs were on foot to make Elizabeth queen. In a conversation about Elizabeth the chancellor agreed with Renard that it would be well to arrest her without delay. 'Were but the Emperor in England,' Gardiner said, 'she would be disposed of with little difficulty.*' Unfortunately, the spies had as yet detected no cause for suspicion on which the government could act legitimately.

CH. 31.
A.D. 1554.
Jan. 23.

Gardiner
and Renard determine to seize
Elizabeth.

Mary, ignorant that she was in immediate danger, and only vaguely uneasy, looked to Philip's coming as the cure of her discomforts. 'Let the prince come,' she said to Renard, 'and all will be well.' She said she would raise eight thousand men and keep them in London as his guard and hers; she would send a fleet into the Channel and sweep the French into their harbours; only let him come before Lent, which was now but a fortnight distant: 'give him my affectionate love,' she added; 'tell him that I will be all to him that a wife ought to be; and tell him, too [delightful message to an already hesitating bridegroom] tell him to bring his own cook with him' for fear he should be poisoned.† The ceremony, could it have been accomplished, would have been

Mary sends a message
to Philip.

* Renard to Charles V.: Rolls House MSS.

† Ibid.

CH. 31. a support to her; but the forms from Rome were long in coming. On the 24th the Emperor was at last able to send a brief, which, in the absence of the bulls, he trusted might be enough to satisfy the queen's scruples. Cuthbert Tunstal, who had been consecrated before the schism, might officiate, and the Pope would remove all irregularities afterwards.* But when the letter and the brief arrived Mary was at no leisure to be married.

A.D. 1554.
 Jan. 24.
 The proxy marriage is about to be celebrated.

Wyatt, having arranged the day for the rising, sent notice to the Duke of Suffolk, who was still in London. On the morning of the 25th an officer of the court appeared at the duke's house, with an intimation that he was to repair to the queen's presence. Suffolk was in a riding dress—'Marry!' he said, 'I was coming to her Grace; ye may see I am booted and spurred; I will but break my fast and go.'† The officer retired. The duke collected as much money as he could lay hands on—sent a servant to warn his brothers, and, though in bad health, mounted his horse and rode without stopping to Lutterworth, where, on the Sunday following, Lord John and Lord Thomas Grey joined him.

Jan. 25.

The Duke of Suffolk flies from London to Leicester-shire.

Kent rises. The same morning of the 25th an alarm was rung on the church bells in the towns and villages in all parts of Kent; and copies of a proclamation were scattered abroad, signifying

* Charles V. to the Ambassadors in England, January 24: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv.

† Chronicle of Queen Mary. Bacoardo says that Suffolk was sent for to take command of the force which was to be sent against Wyatt. But Wyatt's insurrection had not commenced, far less was any resolution taken to send a force against him. Noailles is, doubtless, right in saying that he was to have been arrested. —Ambassades, vol. iii. p. 48.

that the Spaniards were coming to conquer the realm, and calling on loyal Englishmen to rise and resist them. Wyatt's standard was raised at Rochester, the point at which the insurgent forces were to unite; his friends had done their work well, and in all directions the yeomen and the peasants rose in arms. Cheyne threw himself into Dover Castle: Southwell and Abergavenny held to the queen, as had been feared: Abergavenny raised two thousand men, and attacked and dispersed a party of insurgents under Sir Henry Isly on Wrotham Heath; but Abergavenny's followers deserted him immediately afterwards, and marched to Rochester to Wyatt; Southwell could do nothing; he believed that the rebellion would spread to London, and that Mary would be lost.*

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
Jan. 25.

On the 26th, Wyatt, being master of Rochester and the Medway, seized the queen's ships that were in the river, took possession of their guns and ammunition, proclaimed Abergavenny, Southwell, and another gentleman traitors to the commonwealth,† and set himself to organize

Jan. 26.
Wyatt takes the cannon from the ships in the Medway.

* Southwell to Sir William Petre: MS. Mary, Domestic, State Paper Office.

† 'You shall understand that Henry Lord of Abergavenny; Robert Southwell, knight, and George Clarke, gentleman, have most traitorously, to the disturbance of the commonwealth, stirred and raised up the queen's most loving subjects of this realm, to [maintain the] most wicked and devilish enterprise of certain wicked and perverse councillors, to the utter confusion of this her Grace's realm, and the perpetual servitude of all her most loving subjects. In consideration whereof, we Sir Thos. Wyatt, knight, Sir George Harper, knight, Anthony Knyvet, esq., with all the faithful gentlemen of Kent, with the trusty commons of the same, do pronounce and declare the said Henry Lord of Abergavenny, Robert Southwell, and George Clarke to be traitors to God, the crown, and the commonwealth.' —MS. Ibid.

CH. 31. the force which continued to pour in upon him.

A.D. 1554.
Jan. 26.

The court
is defence-
less, and
the council
will not permit a levy of troops.

Messengers, one after another, hurried to London with worse and worse news; Northampton was arrested and sent to the Tower, but Suffolk and his brothers were gone; and, after all which had been said of raising troops, when the need came for them there were none beyond the ordinary guard. The queen had to rely only on the musters of the city and the personal retainers of the council and the other peers; both of which resources she had but too much reason to distrust. In fact, the council, dreading the use to which the queen might apply a body of regular troops, had resisted all her endeavours to raise such a body; Paget had laboured loyally for a fortnight, and at the end he assured the queen on his knees that he had not been allowed to enlist a man.* Divided on all other points, the motley group of ministers agreed to keep Mary powerless; with the exception of Gardiner and Paget, they were all, perhaps, unwilling to check too soon a demonstration which, kept within bounds, might prove the justice of their own objections.

Jan. 27.
Five hundred of the Londoners
are sent to Rochester
under the Duke of Norfolk.

The queen, however, applied to the corporation of the city, and obtained a promise of five hundred men; she gave the command to the Duke of Norfolk, on whose integrity she knew that she could rely; and, sending a herald to Rochester with a pardon, if the rebels would disperse, she despatched Norfolk, Sir Henry Jerningham, and the young Lord Ormond, to Gravesend, without waiting for an answer. The city bands were to follow them immediately. Afraid that Elizabeth would fly before she could be secured, the queen wrote a letter to her studiously gracious, in which she told her that, in the disturbed state of the country, she was uneasy for her safety, and recommended her to take shelter with herself in the palace.* Had Elizabeth obeyed, she would have been instantly arrested; but she was ill, and wrote that she was unable to move. The next day evidence came into Gardiner's hands which he trusted would consign her at last to the scaffold.

* Renard to Charles V. : Rolls House MSS.

CH. 13.

A.D. 1554.
Jan. 27.

The King of France had sent a message to the confederates that he had eighty vessels in readiness, with eighteen companies of infantry, and that he waited to learn on what part of the coast they should effect a landing.† The dangerous communication had been made known to the court. The French ambassador had been narrowly watched, and one of his couriers who left London on the 26th with despatches for Paris was followed to Rochester, where he saw, or attempted to see, Wyatt. The courier, after leaving the town, was

The French ambassador's packet is intercepted at Rochester, and sent to Gardiner.

* STYPER, vol. v. p. 127. Mr. Tytler appeals to this letter as an evidence of the good feeling of the queen towards her sister; but many and genuine as were Mary's good qualities, she may not be credited with a regard for Elizabeth. Renard's letters explain her real sentiments, and account for her outward graciousness. She had already consulted with Renard and Gardiner on the necessity of sending her to the Tower; and, on the 29th of January, as the princess did not avail herself of the queen's proposal, Renard describes himself to the Emperor as pressing her immediate arrest.—Rolls House MSS.

† Renard to Charles V., January 29: Rolls House MSS.

CH. 31. waylaid by a party of Lord Cobham's servants, in the disguise of insurgents; his despatches were
 A.D. 1554. taken from him and sent to the chancellor, who Jan. 27. found in the packet a letter of Noailles to the king in cypher, and a copy of Elizabeth's answer to the queen. Although in the latter there was no treason, yet it indicated a suspicious correspondence. The cypher, could it be read, might be expected to contain decisive evidence against
 her.*

Saturday, Meantime the herald had not been admitted
 Jan 27. into Rochester. He had read the queen's message on the bridge, and, being answered by Wyatt's followers that they required no pardon,
 for they had done no wrong, he retired. Sir Sir George Harper in- vites the Duke of Norfolk to attack Wyatt. George Harper, who was joint commander with Wyatt, stole away the same evening to Gravesend, and presented himself to Norfolk. The rebels, he said, were discontented

* A letter from Gardiner to Sir William Petre is in the State Paper Office, part of which he wrote with the cypher open under his eyes in the first heat of the discovery. The breadth and depth of the pen-strokes express the very pulsation of his passion:—

'As I was in hand with other matters,' the paragraph runs, 'was delivered such letters as in times past I durst not have opened; but now, somewhat heated with these treasons, I waxed bolder, wherein I trust I shall be borne with; wherein hap helpeth me, for they be worth the breaking up an I could wholly decypher them, wherein I will spend somewhat of my leisure, if I can have any. But this appeareth, that the letter written from my Lady Elizabeth to the Queen's Highness, now late in her excuse, is taken a matter worthy to be sent into France; for I have the copy of it in the French Ambassador's packet. I will know what can be done in the decyphering, and to-morrow remit that I cannot do unto you.'—Gardiner to Petre: MS. Mary, Domestic, State Paper Office.

and irresolute; for himself he desired to accept the queen's pardon, which he was ready to earn by doing service against them; if the duke would advance without delay, he would find no resistance, and Wyatt would fall into his hands.

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
Jan. 27.

The London bands arrived the following afternoon, and Norfolk determined to take Harper's advice. The weather was 'very terrible.' On Monday morning it blew so hard that no boat could live; Wyatt, therefore, would be unable to escape by the river, and an immediate advance was resolved upon. Sir Thomas Cheyne was coming up from Dover; Lord William Howard was looked for hourly, and Abergavenny was again exerting himself: Lord Cobham had urged the duke to wait a few days, and had told him that he had certain knowledge from Wyatt himself that 'the Londoners would not fight:'* but Norfolk was confident; the men had assured him of their loyalty; and at four o'clock on Monday afternoon he was on the sloping ground facing towards Rochester, within cannon-shot of the bridge. The duke was himself in front, with Ormond, Jerningham, and eight 'field-pieces,' which he had brought with him. A group of insurgents were in sight across the water, a gun was placed in position to bear upon them; and the gunner was blowing his match, when Sir Edward Bray galloped up, crying out that the 'white coats,' as the London men were called, were changing sides.

Sunday,
Jan. 28.

Monday,
Jan. 29.

Norfolk
follows
Harper's
advice.

* Norfolk to the Council from Gravesend, Sunday, January 28, Monday, January 29: MS. Domestic, Mary, State Paper Office.

CH. 31. The duke had fallen into a trap which Harper had laid for him. Turning round, he saw Brett, the London captain, with all his men, and with Harper at his side, advancing and shouting, 'A Wyatt! a Wyatt! we are all Englishmen!' The first impulse was to turn the gun upon them; the second, and more prudent, was to spring on his horse, and gallop with half a dozen others for his life. His whole force had deserted, and guns, money, baggage, and five hundred of the best troops in London fell into the insurgents' hands, and swelled their ranks.

A.D. 1554.
Jan 29.
The train bands desert, and join Wyatt.
The duke
flies.

No sooner was the duke gone, than Wyatt in person came out over the bridge. 'As many as will tarry with us,' he cried, 'shall be welcome; as many as will depart, let them go.' Very few accepted the latter offer. Three parts, even of Norfolk's private attendants, took service with the rebel leader.

The prestige of success decided all who were wavering in the county. Abergavenny was wholly forsaken; Southwell escaped to the court; Cheyne wrote to the council that he was no longer sure of any one; 'the abominable treason of those that came with the Duke of Norfolk had infected the whole population.' Cobham continued to hold off, but his sons came into Rochester the evening of the duke's flight; and Wyatt sent a message to the father expressing his sorrow that he had been hitherto backward; promising to forgive him, however, and requiring him to be in the camp the next day, when the army would march on London. Cobham still hesitating, two thousand men were at the gates of his house by daybreak the next morning. He refused to lower the drawbridge, but the chains were cut with a cannon-shot, the gates were blown open, and the rebels were storming in when his servants forced him to surrender. The house was pillaged; an oath was thrust on Cobham that he would join, which he took with the intention of breaking it; and the rebels, perhaps seeing cause to distrust him, carried him off to Wyatt as a prisoner.† That night the insurgents rested at Gravesend. The next day they reached Dartford. Their actual numbers were insignificant, but their strength was the disaffection of London, where the citizens were too likely to follow the example which had been set at Rochester.

* 'It is a great deal more than strange,' he added, 'to see the beastliness of the people, to see how earnestly they be bent in this their most devilish enterprise, and will by no means be persuaded the contrary but that it is for the commonweal of all the realm.' — Cheyne to the Council: MS. Mary, Domestic, vol. iii.

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
Jan. 30.
Wyatt calls
on Cobham
to join him;

And Cob-
ham, not complying,
the rebels
storm Cow-
ling Castle.

Jan. 31.

Mary's situation was now really alarming: she

* Cowling Castle, a place already famous in English Reforming history as the residence of Sir John Oldcastle.

† He contrived to send a letter to the queen the evening of the day on which his house was taken. After describing the scene, he added: 'If your Grace will assemble forces in convenient numbers, they not being above 2000 men, and yet not 500 of them able and good armed men, but rascals and rakehells such as live by spoil, I doubt not but your Grace shall have the victory.' — Cobham to the Queen: MS. State Paper Office. But Cobham under-estimated the numbers, and undervalued the composition of Wyatt's forces, perhaps intentionally. Renard, who is generally accurate, says that the rebels at this time amounted to three thousand; Noailles says, twelve or fifteen thousand.

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.

Jan. 31.

The humour of London is dangerous. The council are uncertain, and the court is unprotected.

was without money, notwithstanding the Jews; she had no troops; of all her ministers Paget alone was sincerely anxious to do her service; for Gardiner, on the subject of the marriage, was as unwilling as ever. It was rumoured that the King of Denmark intended to unite with the French in support of the revolutionists, and Renard began calmly to calculate that, should this report prove true, the queen could not be saved. Pembroke and Clinton offered to raise another force in the city and fight Wyatt; but, so far as Mary could tell, they would be as likely to turn against her as to fight in her defence; and she declined their services. Renard offered Gardiner assistance from the Low Countries—Gardiner replied with extreme coldness that he had no desire to see Flemish soldiers in England—and the council generally were ‘so strange’ in their manner, and so languid in their action, that the ambassador could not assure himself that they were not Wyatt’s real instigators. Not a man had been raised to protect the queen, and part of her own guard had been among the deserters at Rochester. She appealed to the honour of the Lords to take measures for her personal safety; but they did nothing, and, it seemed, would do nothing; if London rose, they said merely, she must retire to Windsor.

Renard begins to doubt whether the marriage must not be relinquished.

The aspect of affairs was so threatening, that Renard believed that the marriage at least would have to be relinquished. It seemed as if it could be accomplished only with the help of an invading army; and although Mary would agree to any measure which would secure Philip, the presence of foreign troops, as the Emperor himself was aware, would only increase the exasperation.* The queen's resolution, however, grew with her difficulties. If she could not fight she would not yield; and, taking matters into her own hands, she sent Sir Thomas Cornwallis and Sir Edward Hastings to Dartford, with directions to speak with Wyatt, if possible, alone; to tell him that she ' marvelled at his demeanour,' ' rising as a subject to impeach her marriage;' she was ready to believe, however, that he thought himself acting in the interests of the commonwealth; she would appoint persons to talk over the subject with him, and if it should appear that the marriage would not, as she supposed, be beneficial to the realm, she would sacrifice her wishes.†

The message was not strictly honest, for the queen had no real intention of sacrificing anything. She desired merely to gain time; and, should Wyatt refuse, as she expected, she wished to place herself in a better position to appeal to her subjects for help.‡ But the move under this aspect was skilful and successful; when Cornwallis and Hastings discharged their commission, Wyatt replied that he would rather be trusted than trust: he would argue the marriage with pleasure, but he required first the custody

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
Jan. 31.

The queen sends a message to Wyatt, offering to hear his objections.

Wyatt requires impossible conditions.

* Renard to the Emperor, January 29: Rolls House MSS. The Emperor to Renard, February 4: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv. p. 204.

† Instructions to Sir Thomas Cornwallis and Sir Edward Hastings: MS. State Paper Office.

‡ Renard to the Emperor: Rolls House MSS.

CH. 31. of the Tower, and of the queen's person, and four of the council must place themselves in his hands
 as hostages.*
 A.D. 1554.
 Jan. 31.

Had Wyatt, said Noailles, been able to reach London simultaneously with this answer, he would have found the gates open and the whole population eager to give him welcome. To his misfortune he lingered on the way, and the queen had time to use his words against him. The two gentlemen returned indignant at his insolence. The next morning Count Egmont waited on Mary to say that he and his companions were at her service, and would stand by her to their death. Perplexed as she was, Egmont said he found her 'marvellously firm.' The marriage, she felt, must, at all events, be postponed for the present; the prince could not come till the insurrection was at an end; and, while she was grateful for the offer, she not only thought it best to decline the ambassador's kindness, but she recommended them, if possible, to leave London and the country without delay. • Their party was large enough to irritate the people, and too small to be of use. She bade Egmont, therefore, tell the Emperor that from the first she had put her trust in God, and that she trusted in Him still; and for themselves, she told them to go at once, taking her best wishes with them. They obeyed. Six Antwerp merchant sloops were in the river below the bridge, waiting to sail. They stole on board, dropped down the tide, and were gone.

Feb. 1.
 Egmont
 offers to defend Mary with his life;

But the queen declines his services,
 and sends him out of London.

The afternoon of the same day the queen herself, with a studied air of dejection,* rode through the streets to the Guildhall, attended by Gardiner and the remnant of the guard. In St. Paul's Churchyard she met Pembroke, and slightly bowed as she passed him. Gardiner was observed to stoop to his saddle. The hall was crowded with citizens; some brought there by hatred, some by respect, many by pity, but more by curiosity. When the queen entered she stood forward on the steps, above the throng, and, in her deep man's voice, she spoke to them.†

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
Feb. 1.
She goes to the Guildhall and addresses the citizens.

Her subjects had risen in rebellion against her, she said: she had been told that the cause was her intended marriage with the Prince of Spain; and, believing that it was the real cause, she had offered to hear and to respect their objections. Their leader had betrayed in his answer his true motives; he had demanded possession of the Tower of London and of her own person. She stood there, she said, as lawful Queen of England, and she appealed to the loyalty of her great city to save her from a presumptuous rebel, who, under specious pretences, intended to 'subdue the laws to his will, and to give scope to rascals and forlorn persons to make general havoc and spoil.' As to her marriage, she had supposed that so

She says that Wyatt is coming to pillage the city, and entreats them to protect both themselves and her.

* Vous, assurant, sire, comme celluy qui l'a veu, que scaichant la dicte dame aller au dict lieu, je me delibray en cape de veoir de quelle visage elle et sa compaignie y alloient; que je congneus estre aussy triste et des-plorée qu'il se peult penser.—Noailles to the King of France, Feb. 1.

† La voce grossa et quasi di huomo. — Giovanni Michele ELLIS, vol. ii. series ii.

CH. 31. magnificent an alliance could not have failed to be agreeable to her people. To herself, and, she was not afraid to say, to her council, it seemed to promise high advantage to the commonwealth.
 Marriage, in itself, was indifferent to her; she had been invited to think of it by the desire of the country that she should have an heir; but she could continue happily in the virgin state in which she had hitherto passed her life. She would call a parliament and the subject should be considered in all its bearings; if, on mature consideration, the Lords and Commons of England should refuse to approve of the Prince of Spain as a fitting husband for her, she promised, on the word of a queen, that she would think of him no more.

She will consult parliament
 about her
 marriage,
 and if parliament desires, she will abandon it.

Friday,
 Feb. 2.
 The citizens agree
 to defend
 her.

The spectacle of her distress won the sympathy of her audience; the boldness of her bearing commanded their respect; the promise of a parliament satisfied, or seemed to satisfy, all reasonable demands: and among the wealthy citizens there was no desire to see London in possession of an armed mob, in whom the Anabaptist leaven was deeply interfused. The speech, therefore, had remarkable success. The queen returned to Westminster, leaving the corporation
 converted to the prudence of supporting her.
 Twenty-five thousand men were enrolled the next day for the protection of the crown and the capital; Lord William Howard was associated with the mayor in the command; and Wyatt,
 who had reached Greenwich on Thursday, and had wasted two days there, uncertain whether he should not cross the river in boats to Blackwall, arrived on Saturday morning at Southwark, to find the gates closed on London bridge, and the drawbridge flung down into the water.

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
Saturday,
Feb. 3.

Noailles, for the first time, believed now that the insurrection would fail. Success or failure, in fact, would turn on the reception which the midland counties had given to the Duke of Suffolk; and of Suffolk authentic news had been brought to London that morning.

On the flight of the duke being known at the court, it was supposed immediately that he intended to proclaim his daughter and Guilford Dudley. Rumour, indeed, turned the supposition into fact,* and declared that he had called on the country to rise in arms for Queen Jane. But Suffolk's plan was identical with Wyatt's; he had carried with him a duplicate of Wyatt's proclamation, and, accompanied by his brother, he presented himself in the market-place at Leicester on the morning of Monday the 29th. Lord Huntingdon had followed close upon his track from London; but he assured the Mayor of Leicester that the Earl of Huntingdon was coming, not to oppose, but to join with him. No harm was intended to the queen; he was ready to die in her defence; his object was only to save England from the dominion of foreigners.

Suffolk attempts to raise Leicestershire,

* 'The duke has raised evil-disposed persons, minding her Grace's destruction, and to advance the Lady Jane, his daughter, and Guilford Dudley, her husband.'—Royal Proclamation:

MS. State Paper Office. Printed in the additional Notes to Mr. NICHOLS's Chronicle of Queen Mary. Baoardo says that the duke actually proclaimed Lady Jane.

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
Monday,
Jan. 29.

Intending to march through Coventry
and Warwick to London,

In consequence of these protestations, he was allowed to read his proclamation; the people were indifferent; but he called about him a few scores of his tenants and retainers from his own estates in the country; and, on Tuesday morning, while the insurgents in Kent were attacking Cowling Castle, Suffolk rode out of Leicester, in full armour, at the head of his troops, intending first to move on Coventry, then to take Kenilworth and Warwick, and so to advance on London. The garrison at Warwick had been tampered with, and was reported to be ready to rise. The gates of Coventry he expected to find open. He had sent his proclamation thither the day before, by a servant, and he had friends within the walls who had undertaken to place the town at his disposal.

The state of Coventry was probably the state of most other towns in England. The inhabitants were divided. The mayor and aldermen, the fathers of families, and the men of property were conservatives, loyal to the queen, to the mass, and to 'the cause of order.' The young and enthusiastic, supported by others who had good reasons for being in opposition to established authorities, were those who had placed themselves in correspondence with the Duke of Suffolk.

He sends a servant to Coventry to prepare the way.

Suffolk's servant (his name was Thomas Rampton), on reaching the town, on Monday evening, made a mistake in the first person to whom he addressed himself, and received a cold answer. Two others of the townsmen, however, immediately welcomed him, and told him that

‘the whole place was at his lord’s commandment, CH. 31.
except certain of the town council, who feared that, ^{A.D. 1554.}
if good fellows had the upper hand, their extre- ^{Jan. 29.}
mities heretofore should be remembered.’* They took Rampton into a house, where, presently,
another man entered of the same way of thinking, and, in his own eyes, a man of importance.
‘My Lord’s quarrel is right well known,’ this person said, ‘it is God’s quarrel, let him come;
let him come, and make no stay, for this town is his own. I say to you assuredly this town is his own. I am it.’

It was now night; no time was to be lost, the <sup>The decent citizens,
however,
are on the
queen’s
side.</sup> townsmen said. They urged Rampton to return
at once to Suffolk, and hasten his movements.
They would themselves read the proclamation at
the market-cross forthwith, and raise the people.
Rampton, who had ridden far, and was weary,
wished to wait till the morning; if they were so confident of success, a few hours could make no difference: but it appeared shortly that the ‘good fellows’ in Coventry were not exclusively under the influence of piety and patriotism. If a rising commenced in the darkness, it was admitted that ‘undoubted spoil and peradventure destruction of many rich men would ensue,’ and with transactions of this kind the duke’s servant was unwilling to connect himself.
Thus the hours wore away, and no resolution
was arrived at; and, in the meantime, the town

* Rampton’s Confession: MS. Domestic, Mary, vol. iii. State Paper Office.

CH. 31. council had received a warning to be on their guard. Before daybreak the constables were on the alert, the decent citizens took possession of the gates, and the conspirators had lost their opportunity. In the afternoon Suffolk arrived with a hundred horse under the walls, but there was no admission for him. Whilst he was hesitating which course to pursue, a messenger came in to say that the Earl of Huntingdon was at Warwick. The plot for the revolt of the garrison had been detected, and the whole country was on the alert. The people had no desire to see the Spaniards in England; but sober, quiet farmers and burgesses would not rise at the call of the friend of Northumberland, and assist in bringing back the evil days of anarchy.

A.D. 1554.
Jan. 29.
The popular party do not succeed, and Suffolk arrives to find the gates shut.

The country will not rise.

The Greys had now only to provide for their personal safety.

Suffolk had an estate a few miles distant, called Astley Park, to which the party retreated from Coventry. There the duke shared such money as he had with him among his men, and bade them shift for themselves. Lord Thomas Grey changed coats with a servant, and rode off to Wales to join Sir James Crofts. Suffolk himself, who was ill, took refuge with his brother, Lord John, in the cottage of one of his gamekeepers, where they hoped to remain hidden till the hue and cry should be over, and they could escape abroad.

Suffolk and his brother conceal themselves.

The cottage was considered insecure. Two bowshots south of Astley Church there stood in the park an old decaying tree, in the hollow of which the father of Lady Jane Grey concealed himself; and there, for two winter days and a night, he was left without food. A proclamation had been put out by Huntingdon for Suffolk's apprehension, and the keeper, either tempted by the reward, or frightened by the menace against all who should give him shelter, broke his trust—a rare example of disloyalty—and going to Warwick Castle, undertook to betray his master's hiding-place. A party of troopers were despatched, with the keeper for a guide; and, on arriving at Astley, they found that the duke, unable to endure the cold and hunger longer, had crawled out of the tree, and was warming himself by the cottage fire. Lord John was discovered buried under some bundles of hay.* They were carried off at once to the Tower, whither Lord Thomas Grey and Sir James Crofts, who had failed as signally in Wales, soon after followed them.†

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
Jan. 30.

A game-keeper betrays them, and they are taken.

The account of his confederates' failure saluted Wyatt on his arrival in Southwark, on the 3rd of February. The intelligence was being published, at the moment, in the streets of London; Wyatt himself, at the same time, was proclaimed traitor, and a reward of a hundred pounds was offered for his capture, dead or alive. The peril, however, was far from over; Wyatt replied to the proclamation by wearing his name, in large

Saturday,
Feb. 3.

Wyatt reaches Southwark to find London Bridge broken.

* Renard to the Emperor:
Rolls House MSS.

† I follow Bacardo in the account of the duke's capture. Renard says that he was found in the tree by a little dog: 'qu'a esté grand commencement du miracle pour le succès prospere des affaires de la dicte dame.'—Renard to the Emperor, February 8: MS.

CH. 31. letters, upon his cap; the success of the queen's
 A.D. 1554. speech in the city irritated the council, who did Feb. 3. not choose to sit still under the imputation of having approved of the Spanish marriage. They declared everywhere, loudly and angrily, that they had not approved of it, and did not approve; in the city itself public feeling again wavered, and fresh parties of the train-bands crossed the water and deserted. The behaviour of Wyatt's followers gave the lie to the queen's charges against them:
 the prisons in Southwark were not opened;
 property was respected scrupulously; the only attempt at injury was at Winchester House, and there it was instantly repressed; the inhabitants of the Borough entertained them with warm hospitality; and the queen, notwithstanding her efforts,
 found herself as it were besieged, in her principal
 city, by a handful of commoners, whom no one ventured, or no one could be trusted, to attack.
 So matters continued through Saturday, Sunday,
 Monday, and Tuesday. The lawyers at Westminster Hall pleaded in harness, the judges wore harness under their robes; Doctor Weston sang mass in harness before the queen; tradesmen attended in harness behind their counters. The metropolis, on both sides of the water, was in an attitude of armed expectation, yet there was no movement, no demonstration on either side of popular feeling. The ominous strangeness of the situation appalled even Mary herself.*

The city
again
wavers.

Wyatt is well received at South-
wark,
where he remains
four days.

The cypher despatch of Noailles is
read.

By this time the intercepted letter of Noailles had been decyphered. It proved, if more proof

was wanted, the correspondence between the ambassador and the conspirators; it explained the object of the rising—the queen was to be dethroned in favour of her sister; and it was found, also, though names were not mentioned, that the plot had spread far upwards among the noblemen by whom Mary was surrounded. Evidence of Elizabeth's complicity it did not contain; while, to Gardiner's mortification, it showed that Courtenay, in his confessions to himself, had betrayed the guilt of others, but had concealed part of his own. In an anxiety to shield him the chancellor pronounced the cypher of Courtenay's name to be unintelligible. The queen placed the letter in the hands of Renard, by whom it was instantly read, and the chancellor's humour was not improved: Mary had the mortification of feeling that she was herself the last object of anxiety either to him or to any of her council; though Wyatt was at the gates of London, the council could only spend the time in passionate recriminations; Paget blamed Gardiner for his religious intolerance; Gardiner blamed Paget for having advised the marriage; some exclaimed against Courtenay, some against Elizabeth; but, of acting, all alike seemed incapable. If the queen was in danger, the council said, she might fly to Windsor, or to Calais, or she might go to the Tower. 'Whatever happens,' she exclaimed to Renard, 'I am the wife of the Prince of Spain; crown, rank, life, all shall go before I will take any other husband.'*

CH. 31.
A.D. 1554.
Feb. 5.

The council are irresolute, and the queen is advised to fly.

* Renard to Charles V.: Rolls House MSS. February 5.

СН. 31.

A.D. 1554.
Feb. 5.

The position, however, could not be of long continuance. Could Wyatt once enter London, he assured himself of success; but the gates on the Bridge continued closed. Cheyne and Southwell had collected a body of men on whom they could rely, and were coming up behind from Rochester. Wyatt proposed to return and fight them, and then cross the water at Greenwich, as had been before proposed; but his followers feared that he meant to escape; a backward movement would not be permitted, and his next effort was to ascertain whether the passage over the Bridge could be forced.

Wyatt
examines London
Bridge,

London Bridge was then a long, narrow street. The gate was at the Southwark extremity; the drawbridge was near the middle. On Sunday or Monday night Wyatt scaled the leads of the gatehouse, climbed into a window, and descended the stairs into the lodge. The porter and his wife were nodding over the fire. The rebel leader bade them, on their lives be still, and stole along in the darkness to the chasm from which the drawbridge had been cut away. There, looking across the black gulf where the river was rolling below, he saw the dusky mouths of four gaping cannon, and beyond them, in the torch-light, Lord Howard himself, keeping watch with the guard: neither force nor skill could make a way into the city by London Bridge.

Where he cannot pass.

The course which he should follow was determined for him. The Lieutenant of the Tower, Sir John Brydges, a soldier and a Catholic, had looked across the water with angry eyes at the insurgents collected within reach of his guns, and had asked the queen for permission to fire upon them. The queen, afraid of provoking the people, had hitherto refused; on the Monday, however, a Tower boat, passing the Southwark side of the water, was hailed by Wyatt's sentries; the watermen refused to stop, the sentries fired, and one of the men in the boat was killed. The next morning (whether permission had been given at last, or not, was never known), the guns on the White Tower, the Devil's Tower, and all the bastions, were loaded and aimed, and notice was sent over that the fire was about to open. The inhabitants addressed themselves, in agitation, to Wyatt; and Wyatt, with a sudden resolution, half felt to be desperate, resolved to march for Kingston Bridge, cross the Thames, and come back on London. His friends in the city promised to receive him, could he reach Ludgate by daybreak on Wednesday.

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
Feb. 5.Feb. 6.
The Tower
guns prepare to open on South-
wark.

On Tuesday morning, therefore, Shrove Tuesday, which the queen had hoped to spend more happily than in facing an army of insurgents, Wyatt, accompanied by not more than fifteen hundred men, pushed out of Southwark. He had cannon with him, which delayed his march, but at four in the afternoon he reached Kingston. Thirty feet of the bridge were broken away, and a guard of three hundred men were on the other side; but the guard fled after a few rounds from the guns, and Wyatt, leaving his men to refresh themselves in the town, went to work to repair the passage. A row of barges lay on the oppo-

Wyatt
marches to Kingston
Bridge,

CH. 31. site bank ; three sailors swam across, attached
ropes to them, and towed them over; and, the barges being moored where the bridge was broken, beams and planks were laid across them,
and a road was made of sufficient strength to bear the cannon and the waggons.

A.D. 1554.
Feb. 7.

Where he crosses at night, and returns on London.

By eleven o'clock at night the river was crossed, and the march was resumed. The weather was still wild, the roads miry and heavy, and through the winter night the motley party plunged along. The Rochester men had, most of them, gone home, and those who remained were the London deserters, gentlemen who had compromised themselves too deeply to hope for pardon, or fanatics, who believed they were fighting the Lord's battle, and some of the Protestant clergy. Ponet, the late Bishop of Winchester, was with them; William Thomas, the late clerk of the council; Sir George Harper, Anthony Knyvet, Lord Cobham's sons, Pelham, who had been a spy of Northumberland's on the Continent,* and others more or less conspicuous in the worst period of the late reign.

From the day that Wyatt came to Southwark the whole guard had been under arms at Whitehall, and a number of them, to the agitation of the court ladies, were stationed in the queen's ante-chamber. But the guard was composed of dangerous elements. Sir Humfrey Radcliff, the lieutenant, was a 'favourer of the gospel;† and the

* The Regent Mary to the Ambassadors in England: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv.

† UNDERHILL'S Narrative.

‘Hot Gospeller’ himself, on his recovery from his fever, had returned to his duties.* No additional precautions had been taken, nor does it seem that, on Wyatt’s departure, his movements were watched. Kingston Bridge having been broken, his immediate approach was certainly unlooked for; nor was it till past midnight that information came to the palace that the passage had been forced, and that the insurgents were coming directly back upon London. Between two and three in the morning the queen was called from her bed. Gardiner, who had been, with others of the council, arguing with her in favour of Courtenay the preceding day, was in waiting; he told her that her barge was at the stairs to carry her up the river, and she must take shelter instantly at Windsor.

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
Feb. 7.

The alarm is given at the palace at midnight. The queen is called up, and told that she must fly to Windsor.

Without disturbing herself, the Queen sent for Renard. Shall I go or stay? she asked.

Unless your Majesty desire to throw away

* Underhill, however, was too notorious a person to be allowed to remain on duty at such a time of danger.

‘When Wyatt was come to Southwark,’ he says, ‘the pensioners were commanded to watch in armour that night at the court... After supper, I put on my armour, as the rest did, for we were appointed to watch all the night. So, being all armed, we came up into the chamber of presence with our poleaxes in our hands, wherewith the ladies were very fearful. Some lamenting, crying, and wringing their hands, said, Alas! there is some great mischief toward; we shall all be destroyed this night. What a sight is this, to see the queen’s chamber full of armed men: the like was never seen nor heard of! Mr. Norris, chief usher of Queen Mary’s privy chamber, was appointed to call the watch to see if any were lacking; unto whom, Moore, the clerk of our check, delivered the book of our names; and when he came to my name, What, said he, what doth he here? Sir, said the clerk, he is here ready to serve as the rest be. Nay, by God’s body, said he, that heretic shall not watch here. Give me a pen. So he struck my name out of the book.’

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.

Feb. 7.

Renard
tells her
that if she goes she will lose
her crown.

your crown, Renard answered, you will remain here till the last extremity; your flight will be known; the city will rise, seize the Tower, and release the prisoners; the heretics will massacre the priests, and Elizabeth will be proclaimed queen.

The Lords were divided. Gardiner insisted again that she must and should go. The others were uncertain, or inclined to the opinion of Renard. At last Mary said that she would be guided by Pembroke and Clinton. If those two would undertake to stand by her, she would remain and see out the struggle.*

Pembroke
promises to support
her.

The city
musters are called to arms.

They were not present, and were sent for on the spot. Pembroke for weeks past had certainly wavered; Lord Thomas Grey believed at one time that he had gained him over, and to the last felt assured of his neutrality. Happily for Mary, happily, it must be said, for England—for the Reformation was not a cause to be won by such enterprises as that of Sir Thomas Wyatt—he decided on supporting the queen, and promised to defend her with his life. At four o'clock in the morning drums went round the city, calling the train-bands to an instant muster at Charing Cross. Pembroke's conduct determined the young lords and gentlemen about the court, who with their servants were swiftly mounted and under arms; and by eight, more than ten thousand men were stationed along the ground, then an open field, which slopes from Piccadilly to Pall Mall. The road or causeway on which Wyatt was expected to advance, ran nearly on the site of Piccadilly itself. An old cross stood near the head of St. James's-street, where guns were placed; and that no awkward accident like that at Rochester might happen on the first collision, the gentlemen, who formed four squadrons of horse, were pushed forwards towards Hyde Park Corner.

* Renard to Charles V., February 8: Rolls House MSS.

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
Feb. 7.

Wyatt, who ought to have been at the gate of the city two hours before, had been delayed in the meantime by the breaking down of a gun in the heavy road at Brentford. Brett, the captain of the city deserters, Ponet, Harper, and others, urged Wyatt to leave the gun where it lay and keep his appointment. Wyatt, however, insisted on waiting till the carriage could be repaired, although in the eyes of every one but himself the delay was obvious ruin. Harper, seeing him obstinate, stole away a second time to gain favour for himself by carrying news to the court. Ponet, unambitious of martyrdom, told him he would pray God for his success, and, advising Brett to shift for himself, made away with others towards the sea and Germany.* It was nine o'clock before Wyatt brought the draggled remnant of his force, wet, hungry, and faint with their night march, up the hill from Knightsbridge. Near Hyde Park Corner a lane turned off; and here Pembroke had placed a troop of cavalry. The insurgents straggled on without order. When half of them

Wyatt delayed by the breaking of a gun.

His force is cut in two at Hyde Park Corner.

* Letter of William Markham : Tanner MSS. Bodleian Library. Compare Stow.

CH. 31. had passed, the horse dashed out, and cut them
 in two, and all who were behind were dispersed or captured. Wyatt, caring now only to press forward, kept his immediate followers together,
 and went straight on. The queen's guns opened,
 and killed three of his men; but, lowering his head,
 he dashed at them and over them; then, turning to the right, to avoid the train-bands, he struck down towards St. James's, where his party again separated. Knyvet and the young Cobhams, leaving St. James's to their left, crossed the park to Westminster. Wyatt went right along the present Pall-Mall, past the line of the citizens.
 They had but to move a few steps to intercept his passage, close in, and take him; but not a man advanced, not a hand was lifted; where the way was narrow, they drew aside to let him pass.
 At Charing Cross Sir John Gage was stationed, with part of the guard, some horse, and among them Courtenay, who in the morning had been heard to say he would not obey orders; he was as good a man as Pembroke. As Wyatt came up Courtenay turned his horse towards Whitehall,
 and began to move off, followed by Lord Worcester. 'Fie! my Lord,' Sir Thomas Cornwallis cried to him, 'is this the action of a gentleman?*' But deaf, or heedless, or treacherous, he galloped off, calling Lost, lost! all is lost! and carried panic to the court. The guard had broken at his flight, and came hurrying behind him. Some cried that Pembroke had played false. Shouts of treason

A.D. 1554.
 Feb. 7.

But Wyatt
 himself
 pushes on to Charing Cross. The guard fly,
 and he makes his way up the Strand.

* Renard to Charles V., February 8: Rolls House MSS.

rung through the palace. The queen, who had been watching from the palace gallery, alone retained her presence of mind. If others durst not stand the trial against the traitors, she said, she herself would go out into the field and try the quarrel, and die with those that would serve her.*

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
Feb. 7.
The queen says she will herself take the field.

At this moment Knyvet and the Cobhams, who had gone round by the old palace, came by the gates as the fugitive guard were struggling in. Infinite confusion followed. Gage was rolled in the dirt, and three of the judges with him. The guard shrunk away into the offices and kitchens to hide themselves. But Knyvet's men made no attempt to enter. They contented themselves with shooting a few arrows, and then hurried on to Charing Cross to rejoin Wyatt. At Charing Cross, however, their way was now closed by a company of archers, who had been sent back by Pembroke to protect the court. Sharp fighting followed, and the cries rose so loud as to be heard on the leads of the White Tower. At last the leaders forced their way up the Strand; the rest of the party were cut up, dispersed, or taken.†

The palace is attacked by a second party of rebels, who are cut up at Charing Cross.

Wyatt himself, meanwhile, followed by three hundred men, had hurried on through lines of men who still opened to give him passage. He passed

* HOLINSHED.

† The dress of the Londoners who came with Wyatt being the city uniform, they were distinguished by the dirt upon their legs from their night march. The cry of Pembroke's men in the fight was 'Down with the daggle-tails!'

CH. 31.
 A.D. 1554.
 Feb. 7.
 Wyatt
 reaches Ludgate,
 which is closed in his face.

He turns,
 and attempts to fight his way back,
 but the
 way is closed. He surrenders,
 and is taken to
 the Tower.

Temple Bar, along Fleet-street, and reached Ludgate. The gate was open as he approached, when some one seeing a number of men coming up, exclaimed, 'These be Wyatt's antients.' Muttered curses were heard among the bystanders; but Lord Howard was on the spot; the gates, notwithstanding the murmurs, were instantly closed; and, when Wyatt knocked, Howard's voice answered, 'Avaunt! traitor; thou shalt not come in here.' 'I have kept touch,' Wyatt exclaimed; but his enterprise was hopeless now. He sate down upon a bench outside the Belle Sauvage-yard. His followers scattered from him among the by-lanes and streets; and, of the three hundred, twenty-four alone remained, among whom were now Knyvet and one of the young Cobhams. With these few he turned at last, in the forlorn hope that the train-bands would again open to let him pass. Some of Pembroke's horse were coming up. He fought his way through them to Temple Bar, where a herald cried, 'Sir, ye were best to yield; the day is gone against you; perchance ye may find the queen merciful.' Sir Maurice Berkeley was standing near him on horseback, to whom, feeling that further resistance was useless, he surrendered his sword; and Berkeley, to save him from being cut down in the tumult, took him up upon his horse. Others in the same way took up Knyvet and Cobham, Brett and two more. The six prisoners were taken through the Strand back to Westminster, the passage through the city being thought dangerous; and from Whitehall stairs,

Mary herself looking on from a window of the palace, they were borne off in a barge to the Tower.

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
Feb. 8.

The queen had triumphed, triumphed through her own resolution, and would now enjoy the fruits of victory.

Had Wyatt succeeded, Mary would have lost her husband and her crown; and had the question been no more than a personal one, England could have well dispensed both with her and Philip. But Elizabeth would have ascended a throne under the shadow of treason. The Protestants would have come back to power in the thoughtless vindictiveness of exasperated and successful revolutionists; and the problem of the Reformation would have been more hard than ever of a reasonable solution. The fanatics had made their effort, and they had failed; they had shaken the throne, but they had not overthrown it; the queen's turn was come, and, as the danger had been great, so was the resentment. She had Renard at one ear protesting that, while these turbulent spirits were uncrushed, the precious person of the prince could not be trusted to her. She had Gardiner, who, always pitiless towards heretics, was savage at the frustration of his own schemes. Renard in the closet, Gardiner in the pulpit, alike told her that she must show no more mercy.* On Ash Wednesday

Renard and Gardiner urge the queen to severity.

* 'On Sunday, the 11th of February, the Bishop of Winchester preached in the chapel before the queen.' 'The preachers for the 7 years last past, he said, by dividing of words and other their own additions, had brought in many errors detestable unto

CH. 31. evening, after Wyatt's surrender, a proclamation
 A.D. 1554. forbade all persons to shelter the fugitive insur-
 February. gents under pain of death. The 'poor caitiffs' were brought out of the houses where they had hidden themselves, and were given up by hundreds. Huntingdon came in on Saturday with Suffolk and his brothers. Sir James Crofts, Sir Henry Isly, and Sir Gawen Carew followed. The common prisons overflowed into the churches,
 where crowds of wretches were huddled together
 till the gibbets were ready for their hanging;
 the Tower wards were so full that Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer were packed into a single cell; and all the living representatives of the families of Grey and Dudley, except two young girls, were now within the Tower walls, sentenced, or soon to be sentenced, to death.

The queen's blood is up at last, Renard wrote
 exultingly to the Emperor on the 8th of February;*
 'the Duke of Suffolk, Lord Thomas Grey, and Sir James Crofts have written to ask for mercy,
 but they will find none; their heads will fall, and so with Courtenay's and Elizabeth's. I have told the queen that she must be especially prompt with these two. We have nothing now to hope for except that France will break the peace, and the church of Christ.' 'He axed

 a boon of the Queen's Highness,
 that, like as she had beforetime
 extended her mercy particularly and privately, [and] so through her lenity and gentleness much conspiracy and open rebellion was grown she would now be merciful to the body of the commonwealth and conservation

 thereof, which could not be unless the rotten and hurtful members thereof were cut off and consumed.'—*Chronicle of Queen
 Mary*, p. 54.

* Rolls House MSS.

then all will be well.' On the 12th of February the ambassador was still better satisfied. Elizabeth had been sent for, and was on her way to London. A rupture with France seemed inevitable, and as to clemency, there was no danger of it. 'The queen,' he said, 'had told him that Anne of Cleves was implicated;' but for himself he was sure that the two centres of all past and all possible conspiracies were Elizabeth and Courtenay, and that when their heads, and the heads of the Greys, were once off their shoulders, she would have nothing more to fear. The prisoners were heretics to a man; she had a fair plea to despatch them, and she would then settle the country as she pleased;* 'the house of Suffolk would soon be extinct.'

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
February.

The house of Suffolk would be extinct: that too, or almost that, had been decided on. Jane Grey was guiltless of this last commotion; her name had not been so much as mentioned among the insurgents; but she was guilty of having been once called queen, and Mary, who before had been generously deaf to the Emperor's advice, and to Renard's arguments, yielded in her present humour. Philip was beckoning in the distance; and while Jane Grey lived, Philip, she was again and again assured, must remain for ever separated from her arms.

Jane Grey
is to be the first victim.

Jane Grey, therefore, was to die—her execution was resolved upon the day after the victory; and the first intention was to put her to death on the Friday immediately approaching. In killing her

* Renard to Charles V. February 12: Rolls House MSS.

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.

Feb. 9.

The queen
sends Feckenham
to convert her before
death.

body, however, Mary desired to have mercy on her soul; and she sent the message of death by the excellent Feckenham, afterwards Abbot of Westminster, who was to bring her, if possible, to obedience to the Catholic faith.

Feckenham, a man full of gentle and tender humanity, felt to the bottom of his soul the errand on which he was despatched. He felt as a Catholic priest—but he felt also as a man.

On admission to Lady Jane's room he told her that she was to die the next morning, and he told her, also, for what reason the queen had selected him to communicate the sentence.

She listened calmly. The time was short, she said; too short to be spent in theological discussion; which, if Feckenham would permit, she would decline.

On Fecken-ham's en-
treaty, the queen grants
three days'
respite;

Believing, or imagining that he ought to believe, that, if she died unreconciled, she was lost, Feckenham hurried back to the queen to beg for delay; and the queen, moved with his entreaties, respited the execution till Monday, giving him three more days to pursue his labour. But Lady Jane, when he returned to her, scarcely appreciated the favour; she had not expected her words to be repeated, she said; she had given up all thoughts of the world, and she would take her death patiently whenever her Majesty desired.*

* BAOARDO. The writer of the Chronicle of Queen Mary, says, 'She was appointed to have been put to death on Friday, but was stayed—for what cause is not known.' Baoardo supplies the explanation.

Feckenham, however, still pressed his services, and courtesy to a kind and anxious old man, forbade her to refuse them. He remained with her to the end; and certain arguments followed on faith and justification, and the nature of sacraments; a record of which may be read by the curious in Foxe.* Lady Jane was wearied without being convinced. The tedium of the discussion was relieved, perhaps, by the now more interesting account which she gave to her unsuccessful confessor of the misfortune which was bringing her to her death.† The night before she suffered she wrote a few sentences of advice to her sister on the blank leaf of a New Testament. To her father, knowing his weakness, and knowing, too, how he would be worked upon to imitate the recantation of Northumberland, she sent a letter of exquisite beauty, in which the exhortations of a dying saint are tempered with the reverence of a daughter for her father.‡

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
Feb. 12.
Which are spent in unfruitful discussions.

Lady Jane
prepares
for death.

The iron-hearted Lieutenant of the Tower, Sir John Brydges, had been softened by the charms of his prisoner, and begged for some memorial of her in writing. She wrote in a manual of English prayers the following words:—

‘Forasmuch as you have desired so simple a woman to write in so worthy a book, good Master Lieutenant, therefore I shall, as a friend, desire you, and as a Christian, require you, to call upon God

* Vol. vi. pp. 415-417.

† The story told by Baordo, to whom, it would seem, Feckenham related it.

‡ FOXE, vol. vi.

CH. 31. to incline your heart to his laws, to quicken you
 A.D. 1554. in his way, and not to take the word of truth
 Feb. 12. utterly out of your mouth. Live still to die, that by death you may purchase eternal life, and remember how Methuselah, who, as we read in the Scriptures, was the longest liver that was of a man, died at the last: for, as the Preacher saith,
 there is a time to be born and a time to die; and the day of death is better than the day of our birth. Yours, as the Lord knoweth, as a friend.
 Jane Dudley.*

Guilford
 Dudley is first executed.

Her husband was also to die, and to die before her. The morning on which they were to suffer
 he begged for a last interview and a last embrace.
 It was left to herself to consent or refuse. If,
 she replied, the meeting would benefit either of their souls, she would see him with pleasure; but,
 in her own opinion, it would only increase their trial. They would meet soon enough in the other world.

* Chronicle of Queen Mary,
 p. 57, note. In the same manual
 are a few words in Guilford Dudley's hand, addressed to Suffolk, and a few words also addressed to Suffolk by Lady Jane.
 Mr. Nichols supposes that the book, (it is still extant among the Harleian MSS.), was used as a means of communicating with the duke when direct intercourse was unpermitted. If this conjecture is right, Lady Jane's letter, perhaps, never reached her father at all. There is some difficulty about the memorial which the Lieutenant of the Tower obtained from her.

BAOARDO says, that she gave him
 a book, in which she had written a few words in Greek, Latin, and English.

'La Greca era tale. La morte dara la pena al mio corpo del
 fallo ma la mia anima giustificara inanzi al conspetto di Dio
 la innocenza mia.

'La Latina diceva. Se la giustitia ha luogo nel corpo mio
 l'anima mia l'havera nella misericordia di Dio.

'La Inglese. Il fallo e degno
 di morte ma il modo della mia
 ignoranza doueva meritar pieta e excusatione appresso il mondo e alle leggi.'

He died, therefore, without seeing her again. She saw him once alive as he was led to the scaffold, and again as he returned a mutilated corpse in the death-cart. It was not wilful cruelty. The officer in command had forgotten that the ordinary road led past her window. But the delicate girl of seventeen was as masculine in her heart as in her intellect. When her own turn arrived, Sir John Brydges led her down to the green; her attendants were in an agony of tears, but her own eyes were dry. She prayed quietly till she reached the foot of the scaffold, when she turned to Feckenham, who still clung to her side. 'Go now,' she said; 'God grant you all your desires, and accept my own warm thanks for your attentions to me; although, indeed, those attentions have tried me more than death can now terrify me.'* She sprung up the steps, and said briefly that she had broken the law in accepting the crown; but as to any guilt of intention, she wrung her hands, and said she washed them clean of it in innocence before God and man. She entreated her hearers to bear her witness that she died a true Christian woman; that she looked to be saved only by the mercy of God and the merits of his Son: and she begged for their prayers as long as she was alive. Feckenham had still followed her, notwithstanding his dismissal. 'Shall I say the Miserere psalm?' she said to him.†

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
Feb. 12.

Lady Jane follows,

And, with a few words declaring her innocence,

* Andate: che nostro Signore Dio vi contenti d'ogni vostro desiderio, e siate sempre infinitamente ringratiato della compagnia che m'havete fatta avenga che da quella sia stata molto

piu noiata che hora non mi spaventa la morte.—BAOARDO.

† The 51st: 'Have mercy on me, oh Lord, after thy goodness.'

CH. 31. When it was done, she let down her hair with her attendants' help, and uncovered her neck. The rest may be told in the words of the chronicler:—
A.D. 1554.
Feb. 12.

'The hangman kneeled down and asked her forgiveness, whom she forgave most willingly. Then he willed her to stand upon the straw, which doing, she saw the block. Then she said I pray you despatch me quickly. Then she kneeled down, saying, Will you take it off before I lay me down; and the hangman answered No, Madam. She tied a kercher about her eyes; then, feeling for the block, she said, What shall I do; where is it? One of the bystanders guiding her thereunto, she laid her head down upon the block, and stretched forth her body, and said, Lord, into thy hands I commend my spirit. And so ended.'*

She dies.

The common prisoners are executed by wholesale.

The same day Courtenay was sent to the Tower, and a general slaughter commenced of the common prisoners. To spread the impression, gibbets were erected all over London, and by Thursday evening eighty or a hundred bodiest† were dangling in St. Paul's Churchyard, on London Bridge, in Fleet-street, and at Charing Cross, in Southwark and Westminster. At all crossways and in all thoroughfares, says Noailles, 'the eye was met with the hideous spectacle of hanging men;'

* Chronicle of Queen Mary, pp. 58, 59.

† Renard says: 'A hundred were hanged in London and a hundred in Kent.' Stow says: 'Eighty in London and twenty-two in Kent.' The Chronicle of Queen Mary does not mention the number of executions in London, but agrees with Stow on the number sent to Kent. The smaller estimate, in these cases, is generally the right one.

while Brett and a fresh batch of unfortunates were sent to suffer at Rochester and Maidstone. Day after day, week after week, commissioners sate at Westminster or at the Guildhall trying prisoners, who passed with a short shrift to the gallows. The Duke of Suffolk was sentenced on the 17th; on the 23rd he followed his daughter, penitent for his rebellion, but constant, as she had implored him to be, in his faith. His two brothers and Lord Cobham's sons were condemned. William Thomas, to escape torture, stabbed himself, but recovered to die at Tyburn. Lord Cobham himself, who was arrested notwithstanding his defence of his house, Wyatt, Sir James Crofts, Sir William St. Lowe, Sir Nicholas Arnold, Sir Nicholas Throgmorton, and, as the council expressed it, 'a world more,' were in various prisons waiting their trials. Those who were suspected of being in Elizabeth's confidence were kept with their fate impending over them—to be tempted either with hopes of pardon, or by the rack, to betray their secrets.*

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
Feb. 12

The Duke
of Suffolk
is executed.

The leaders
generally
are preserved, to extract confessions
from them
against
Elizabeth.

But, sooner or later, the queen was determined

* On Sunday, the 11th of February, the day on which he exhorted the queen to severity from the pulpit, Gardiner wrote to Sir William Petre, 'To-morrow, at your going to the Tower, it shall be good ye be earnest with one little Wyatt there prisoner, who by all likelihood can tell all. He is but a bastard, and hath no substance; and it might stand with the Queen's Highness's pleasure there were no great account to be made whether ye pressed him to say truth by sharp punishment or promise of life.' — MS. Domestic, Mary, vol. iii. State Paper Office. I do not know to whom Gardiner referred in the words 'little Wyatt.'

CH. 31. that every one who could be convicted should die,*
 A.D. 1554. and beyond, and above them all, Elizabeth. Eliza-February. beth's illness, which had been supposed to have been assumed, was real, and as the feeling of the people towards her compelled the observance of the forms of justice and decency, physicians were sent from the court to attend upon her. On the Feb. 18. 18th of February they reported that she could be moved with safety; and, escorted by Lord
 William Howard, Sir Edward Hastings, and Sir
 Elizabeth Thomas Cornwallis, she was brought by slow is brought stages, of six or seven miles a day, to London.† to London. Renard had described her to the Emperor as probably enceinte through some vile intrigue,
 and crushed with remorse and disappointment.‡

To give the lie to all such slanders, when she entered the city, the princess had the covering of her litter thrown back; she was dressed in white,
 her face was pale from her illness, but the expression was lofty, scornful, and magnificent.§ Crowds followed her along the streets to Westminster. The queen, when she arrived at Whitehall, refused to see her; a suite of rooms
 was assigned for her confinement in a corner of the palace, from which there was no egress except by passing the guard, and there, with short attendance, she waited the result of Gardiner's investigations. Wyatt, by vague

The queen
 will not see her, and she is kept
 a prisoner
 at the palace.

* Renard to the Emperor:
Rolls House MSS.

† The Order of my Lady Elizabeth's Grace's Voyage to the Court: MS. Mary, Domestic,
 vol. iii. State Paper Office.

‡ Renard to the Emperor,
 February 17: Rolls House MSS.

§ 'Pour desguyser le regret qu'elle a,' says Renard, unable to relinquish his first conviction.

admissions, had already partially compromised her, and, on the strength of his words, and the discovery of the copy of her letter in the packet of Noailles, she would have gone direct to the Tower, had the Lords permitted. The Emperor urged instant and summary justice both on her and on Courtenay; the irritation, should irritation arise, could be allayed afterwards by an amnesty.* The Lords, however, insisted obstinately on the forms of law, the necessity of witnesses, and of a trial; and Renard watched their unreasonable humours with angry misgivings. It was enough, he said, that the conspiracy was undertaken in Elizabeth's interests; if she escaped now, the queen would never be secure.† In fact, while Elizabeth lived, the prince could not venture among the wild English spirits, and Charles was determined that the marriage should not escape him.

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
February.

The Emperor urges her immediate execution,

And Renard holds the form of a trial to be needless.

As soon as the rebellion was crushed, Egmont, attended by Count Horn, returned to complete his work. He brought with him the dispensations in regular form. He brought also a fresh and pressing entreaty that Elizabeth should be sacrificed. An opportunity had been placed

Egmont returns to England,

* Renard was instructed to exhort the queen: 'Que l'exécution et chastoy de ceulx qui le meritent se face tost; usant à l'endroit de Madame Elizabeth et de Cortenay comme elle verra convenir à sa sheureté, pour après user de clémence en l'endroit de ceulx qu'il luy semblera, afin de tost rassurer le surplus. — The Emperor to Renard: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv. pp. 224, 225.

† Il est certain l'enterprinse estoit en sa faveur. Et certes, sire, si pendant que l'occasion s'adonne elle ne la punyt et Cortenay, elle ne sera jamais assurée.—Renard to Charles V.: Tytler, vol. ii. p. 311.

CH. 31.
 A.D. 1554.
 March.
 And again
 urges the execution
 of Elizabeth.

in the queen's hand, which her duty to the Church required that she should not neglect; and Egmont was directed to tell her that the Emperor, in trusting his son in a country where his own power could not protect him, relied upon her honour not to neglect any step essential to his security.* Egmont gave his message. The unhappy queen required no urging; she protested to Renard, that she could neither rest nor sleep, so ardent was her desire for the prince's safe arrival.† Courtenay, if necessary, she could kill; against him the proofs were complete; as to Elizabeth, she knew her guilt; the evidence was growing; and she would insist to the council that justice should be done.

The council
 will no longer
 oppose the
 marriage.

About the marriage itself, the Lords had by this time agreed to yield. Courtenay's pretensions could no longer be decently advanced, and Gardiner, abandoning a hopeless cause, and turning his attention to the restoration of the Church, would consent to anything, if, on his side, he might emancipate the clergy from the control of the civil power, and re-establish persecution. Two factions, distinctly marked, were now growing in the council—the party of the statesmen, composed of Paget, Sussex, Arundel, Pembroke, Lord William Howard, the Marquis of Winchester, Sir Edward Hastings, and Cornwallis: the party of the Church, composed of

* Renard to the Emperor, March 8: Rolls House MSS.

† La quelle me respondit et afferme qu'elle ne dort ny repose

pour le soucy elle tient de la seure venue de son Altesse.—

Renard to the Emperor: TYTLER, vol. ii.

Gardiner, Petre, Rochester, Gage, Jerningham, and Bourne. Divided on all other questions, the rival parties agreed only no longer to oppose the coming of Philip. The wavering few had been decided by the presents and promises which Egmont brought with him from Charles. Pensions of two thousand crowns had been offered to, and were probably accepted by the Earls of Pembroke, Arundel, Derby, and Shrewsbury; pensions of a thousand crowns were given to Sussex, Darcy, Winchester, Rochester, Petre, and Cheyne; pensions of five hundred crowns to Southwell, Waldegrave, Inglefield, Wentworth, and Grey;* ten thousand crowns were distributed among the officers and gentlemen who had distinguished themselves against Wyatt. The pensions were large, but, as Renard observed, when Charles seemed to hesitate, several of the recipients were old, and would soon die; and, as to the rest, things in England were changing from day to day, and means of some kind would easily be found to put an early end to the payments.†

CH. 31.
A.D. 1554.
March.

Pensions
are distributed
among them by Charles.

Unanimity having been thus secured, on the day of Egmont's arrival Renard demanded an audience of the Lords, and in the queen's presence requested their opinion whether the condition of England allowed the completion of the contract. The life of the Prince of Spain was of great importance to Europe; should they believe in their

* Granvelle Papers, vol. iv. p. 267.

† Renard to Charles V., March 8: Rolls House MSS.

CH. 31. hearts that he would be in danger, there was still time to close the negotiation. The rebellion having broken out and having failed, the Lords replied that there was no longer any likelihood of open violence. Arundel hinted, again, that the prince must bring his own cook and butler with him;* but he had nothing else to fear, if he could escape the French cruisers.

A.D. 1554.
 March.
 The Lords
 assure Re-nard that Philip may come to England
 safely,

March 6.

And the queen is formally betrothed
 to him.

These assurances, combined with the queen's secret promises about Elizabeth, were held sufficient; and on the 6th of March, at three o'clock in the afternoon, the ambassadors were conducted by Pembroke into the presence chamber. The queen, kneeling before the sacrament, called it to witness that, in consenting to the alliance with the Prince of Spain, she was moved by no carnal concupiscence, but only by her zeal for the welfare of her realm and subjects; and then, rising up, with the bystanders
 all in tears, she gave her hand to Egmont as Philip's representative. The blessing was pronounced by Gardiner, and the proxy marriage was completed.† The prince was to be sent for without delay, and Southampton was chosen as the port at which he should disembark, 'being in

* Arundel nous dit qu'il convenoit que son alteze amena ses cuyseniers, sommeliers du cave, et autres officiers pour son bouche, que quantaux autres luy y pourvoyeroit selon les coustumes d'Angleterre.—Renard to Charles V. : Rolls House MSS.

† Puis par la main de l'Evesque de Winchester les pro-

messes et paroles de præsenti, furent dictes et prononcées intelligiblement par la dict Egmont seul et la dicte Dame.—Ibid. Compare TYTLER, vol. ii. p. 327. The great value of Mr. Tytler's work is diminished by the many omissions which he has permitted himself to make in the letters which he has edited.

the country of the Bishop of Winchester,' where the people were, for the most part, good Catholics.

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
March.

Parliament was expected to give its sanction without further difficulty; the opposition of the country having been neutralized by the same causes which had influenced the council. The queen, indeed, in going through the ceremony before consulting parliament, though she had broken the promise which she made in the Guild-hall, had placed it beyond their power to raise difficulties; but other questions were likely to rise which would not be settled so easily. She herself was longing to show her gratitude to Providence by restoring the authority of the Pope; and the Pope intended, if possible, to recover his first-fruits and Peter's pence, and to maintain the law of the Church which forbade the alienation of Church property.* The English laity were resolute on their side to keep hold of what they had got; and to set the subject at rest, and to prevent unpleasant discussions on points of theology, Paget, with his friends, desired that the session should last but a few days, and that two measures only should be brought forward; the first for the confirmation of the treaty of marriage, the second to Parliament is about to meet, when unpleasant questions will be raised.

* Pole's first commission granted him powers only 'concordandi et transigendi cum possessoribus bonorum ecclesiasticorum, (restitutis prius si expedire videretur immobilibus per eos indebite detentis,) super fructibus male perceptis ac bonis mobilibus con-sumptis.—Commission granted to Reginald Pole: WILKINS's Concilia, vol. iv. Cardinal Morone, writing to Pole as late as June, 1554, said that the Pope was still unable to resolve on giving his sanction to the alienation.—BURNET's Collectanea.

CH. 31. reassert the validity of the titles under which
 A.D. 1554. the Church estates were held by their present March. owners. If the queen consented to the last, her title of Head of the Church might be dropped informally, and allowed to fall into abeyance.*

Gardiner
 desires to recover the power of persecution, and will have parliament
 meet at Oxford,

Gardiner, however, saw in the failure of the insurrection an opportunity of emancipating the Church, and of extinguishing heresy with fire and sword.† He was preparing a bill to restore the ancient rigorous tyranny of the ecclesiastical courts; and by his own authority he directed that, in the writs for the parliament, the summons
 should be to meet at Oxford,‡ where the conservatism of the country would be released from the dread of the London citizens. The spirit which, thirteen years before, had passed the Six Articles Bill by acclamation, continued to smoulder in the slow minds of the country gentlemen, and was blazing freely among the lately persecuted priests.
 The Bishop of Winchester had arranged in his imagination a splendid melodrama. The session was to begin on the 2nd of April; and the ecclesiastical bill was to be the first to be passed. On the 8th of March, Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer
 were sent down to the university to be tried before a Committee of Convocation which had already decided on its verdict; and the Fathers of the Reformation were either to recant or to suffer
 the flaming penalties of heresy in the presence of

Where Cranmer,
 Ridley, and Latimer
 shall be the first to suffer.

* Paget to Renard: TYTLER, vol. ii.

† Par feug et sang.—Renard to Charles V., March 14: Rolls

House MSS.; partially printed by TYTLER.

‡ Ibid.

the legislature, as the first-fruits of a renovated Church discipline. CH. 31.

Vainly Renard protested. In the fiery obstinacy of his determination, Gardiner was the incarnate expression of the fury of the ecclesiastical faction, smarting, as they were, under their long degradation, and under the irritating consciousness of those false oaths of submission which they had sworn to a power which they loathed. Once before, in the first reaction against Protestant excesses, the Bishop of Winchester had seen the Six Articles Bill carried—but his prey had then been snatched from his grasp. Now, embittered by fresh oppression, he saw his party once more in a position to revenge their wrongs when there was no Henry any longer to stand between them and their enemies. He would take the tide at the flood, forge a weapon keener than the last, and establish the Inquisition.* Paget swore it should not be.† Charles V. himself, dreading a fresh interruption to the marriage, insisted that this extravagant fervour should be checked;‡ and the Bishop of Arras, the scourge of the Netherlands, interceded for moderation in England. But Gardiner and the clergy were not to be turned from the hope of their hearts by the private alarms of the Imperialists; and in the heart of the queen religious orthodoxy was Philip's solitary rival. Renard urged her to be prudent in religion and cruel to the political

A.D. 1554.
March.

Gardiner desires to establish the Inquisition,

And will listen to no remonstrances.

* Establir form d'Inquisition contre les heretiques.—Renard to Charles V.: Rolls House MSS.

† Ibid.
‡ La chaleur exorbitante.—Charles V. to Renard: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv. p. 229.

CH. 31. prisoners. Gardiner, though eager as Renard to ———— kill Elizabeth, would buy the privilege of working
 A. D. 1554. his will upon the Protestants by sparing Courte-March. nay and Courtenay's friends. Mary listened to the worst counsels of each, and her distempered humour settled into a confused ferocity. So unwholesome appeared the aspect of things in the middle of March that, notwithstanding the formal contract, Renard almost advised the Emperor to relinquish the thought of committing his son among so wild a people.*

Creation of Catholic
 bishops and peers.

As opposition to extreme measures was anticipated in the House of Lords, as well as among the Commons, it was important to strengthen the bench of Bishops. The Pope had granted permission without difficulty to fill the vacant sees; and on the 1st of April six new prelates were consecrated at St. Mary Overies, while Sir John Brydges and Sir John Williams
 of Thame were raised to the peerage.

The voice
 in the wall
 at Aldgate,

The Protestants, it must be admitted, had exerted themselves to make Gardiner's work easy to him. On the 14th of March the wall of a house in Aldgate became suddenly vocal, and seventeen thousand persons were collected to hear
 a message from Heaven pronounced by an angel.
 When the people said 'God save Queen Mary,'
 the wall was silent; when they said 'God save Queen Elizabeth,' the wall said 'Amen!' When they asked, 'What is the mass?' the wall said,

* Pour estre la plus part des Angloys sans foy, sans loy, confuz en la religion, doubles, in- constans, et de nature jaloux et abhorrissans estrangiers.—Rolls House MSS.

‘It is idolatry.’ As the nation was holding its peace, the stones, it seemed, were crying out against the reaction. But the angel, on examination, turned out to be a girl concealed behind the plaster. Shortly after, the inhabitants of Cheap-side, on opening their shop windows in the morning, beheld on a gallows, among the bodies of the hanged insurgents, a cat in priestly robes, with crown shaven, the fore-paws tied over her head, and a piece of paper clipped round between them, representing the wafer.

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
March.And other
extravagances of the Protestants.

More serious were the doings of a part of the late conspirators who had escaped to France. Peter Carew, when he left Weymouth, promised soon to return, and he was received at Paris with a cordiality that answered his warmest hopes. Determined, if possible, to prevent Philip from reaching England, the French had equipped every vessel which they possessed available for sea, and Carew was sent again to the coast of the Channel to tempt across into the French service all those who, like himself, were compromised in the conspiracy, or whose blood was hotter than their fathers’. Every day the queen was chafed with the news of desertions to their dangerous rendezvous. Young men of honourable families, Pickerings, Strangways’s, Killebrews, Staffords, Stauntons, Tremaynes, Courtenays, slipped over the water, carrying with them hardy sailors from the western harbours. The French supplied them with arms, ships, and money; and fast-sailing, heavily-armed privateers, officered by these young adventurers in the cause of freedom, were

The discon-
tented English
gentlemen
join Sir
Peter Carew in France.The French
king provides them
with ships.

CH. 31. cruising on their own account, plundering Flemish and Spanish ships, and swearing that the Prince of Spain should set no foot on English shores.*

A.D. 1554.
March.

The queen demands their extradition, which the King of France refuses.

The queen indignantly demanded explanations of Noailles, and, through her ambassador at Paris,

* The French and Calais correspondence in the State Paper Office contains a vast number of letters on this subject. The following extracts are specimens :—

On the 24th of March Thomas Corry writes to Lord Grey that, 'two hundred vessels be in readiness' in the French harbours. 'There is lately arrived at Caen in Normandy, Sir Peter Carew, Sir William Pickering, Sir Edward Courtenay, John Courtenay, Brian Fitzwilliam, and divers other English gentlemen. It is thought Sir Peter Carew shall have charge of the fleet. There be three ships of Englishmen, which be already gone to sea with Killigrew, which do report that they serve the king to prevent the coming of the King of Spain.'—Calais MSS.

On the 28th of March, Edgar Hormolden writes from Guisnes to Sir John Bourne: 'The number of Sir Peter Carew's retinue increaseth in France by the confluence of such English qui potius alicujus prælari facinoris quam artis bonæ famam quærunt; and they be so entreated them as it cannot be otherwise conjectured but that they practise with France: inso-much I have heard credible intelligence that the said Carew used this persuasion, of late, to his companions: Are not we, said he, allied with Normandy; yea! what ancient house is either there or in France, but we claim by them and they by us? why should we not rather embrace their love than submit ourselves to the servitude of Spain.'—Ibid.

April 17, Dr. Wotton writes in cypher from Paris to the queen: 'Yesterday, an Italian brought a letter to my lodging, and delivered it to a servant of mine, and went his way, so that I know not what he is. The effect of his letter is, that for because he taketh it to be the part of every good Christian man to further your godly purpose and Catholic doings, he hath thought good to advertise me that those fugitives of England say to their friends here that they have intelligence of great importance in England with some of the chiefest in the realm, which shall appear on the arrival of the Prince of Spain. Within few days they go to Normandy to embark themselves there, so strong, that, if they do not let the Prince of Spain to land, as they will attempt to do, yet they will not fail, by the help of them that have intelligence with them, to let him to come to London.'—French MSS. bundle xi.

she required the French government to seize 'her traitors,' and deliver them to her. Noailles, alarmed, perhaps, for his own security, suggested that it might be well to conceal Carew, and to affect to make an attempt to arrest him. But Henry, at once more sagacious and more bold, replied to the ambassador that 'he was not the queen's hangman:' 'these men that you require,' he said, 'deny that they have conspired anything against the queen; marry, they say they will not be oppressed by mine enemy, and that is no just cause why I should owe them ill-will.*' He desired Noailles, with quiet irony, to tell her Majesty 'that there was nothing in the existing treaties to forbid his accepting the services of English volunteers in the war with the Emperor: her Majesty might remember that he had invited her to make a new treaty, and that she had refused:' 'he would act by the just letter of his obligations.†

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
March.

Would her subjects have permitted, the queen would have replied by a declaration of war. As it was, she could only relieve herself with indignant words.‡ But Carew and his friends might depend

The queen
is impotently
angry.

* Wotton to the Queen: French MSS. bundle xi. State Paper Office.

† Noailles to the King of France: Ambassades, vol. iii.

‡ 'When the ambassador replied that his master minded to do justly, her Grace remembering how those traitors be there aided, especially such of them as had conspired her death and were in arms in the field against her; and being not able to bear

those words, so contrary to their doings, told the ambassador that, for her own part, her Majesty minded simply and plainly to perform as she had promised, and might with safe conscience swear she ever meant so; but, for their part, her Grace would not swear so, and being those arrant traitors so entertained there as they be, she could not have found in her heart to have used, in like matter, the sem-

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
March.The title of
the Queen
of Scots
may be raised against her.The heretics play
into the queen's hand.The battle of the London school-
boys.

on support so long as they would make themselves useful to France. Possessed of ships and arms, they were a constant menace to the Channel, and a constant temptation to the disaffected; and, growing bitter at last, and believing that Elizabeth's life was on the point of being sacrificed, they were prepared to support Henry in a second attempt to seize the Isle of Wight, and to accept the French competitor for the English crown in the person of the Queen of Scots.* Thus fatally the friends of the Reformation played into the hands of its enemies. By the solid mass of Englishmen the armed interference of France was more dreaded than even a Spanish sovereign; and the heresy became doubly odious which was tampering with the hereditary enemies of the realm. In London only the revolutionary spirit continued vigorous, and broke out perpetually in unexpected forms. At the beginning of March three hundred schoolboys met in a meadow outside the city walls: half were for Wyatt and for France, half for the Prince of Spain; and, not all in play (for evidently they chose their sides by their sympathies), they joined battle, and blable part towards his master, for the gain of two realms, and with those words she departed.'—Gardiner to Wotton: French MSS. bundle xi.

* On the 29th of April Wotton wrote in cypher to Mary: 'Towards the end of the summer the French king, by Peter Carew's provocation, intendeth to land the rebels, with a number of Scots, in Essex, and in the Isle of Wight, where they mean to land easily, and either go on, if any number of Englishmen resort unto them, as they say many will, or else fortify themselves there. They counsel the French king to make war against your Highness in the right and title of the young Queen of Scots.—MS. Ibid.

fought with the fierceness of grown men. The combat ended in the capture of the representative of Philip, who was dragged to a gallows, and would have been hanged upon it, had not the spectators interfered.* The boys were laid hands upon. The youngest were whipped, the elder imprisoned. It was said that the queen thought of gibbeting one of these innocents in real fact, for an example; or, as Noailles put it, as an expiation for sins of the people.†

CH. 31.
A.D. 1554.
March.

Over Elizabeth, in the meantime, the fatal net appeared to be closing; Lord Russell had received a letter for her from Wyatt, which, though the Princess declared that it had never been in her hands, he said that he had forwarded; and Wyatt himself was flattered with hopes of life if he would extend his confession. Renard carried his ingenuity farther; he called in the assistance of Lady Wyatt, and promised her that her husband should be spared; he even urged the queen to gain over, by judicious leniency, a man whose apostacy would be a fresh disgrace to his cause, and who might be as useful as a servant as he had been dangerous as a foe.‡ Wyatt, being a man without solidity of heart, showed signs of yield-

The court labour hard to induce Wyatt to accuse Elizabeth.

* The execution was commenced in earnest. The prince, says Noailles, 'fust souldainement mesné au gibet par ceulx de la part du Roy et de M. Wyatt; et sans quelques hommes qui tout à propos y accoururent, ils l'eussent estranglé; ce que se peult clairement juger par les marques qu'il en a et aura encores d'icy a long temps au ool.'—Noailles to Montmorency: Ambassades, vol. iii.

† Dict on qu'elle veult que l'ung d'eulx soit sacrifié pour tout le peuple.—Ibid.

‡ Ce qui faict juger a beaucoup de gens que Wyatt ne mourra point, mais que la dicte dame le rendra tant son obligé

CH. 31.
 A.D. 1554.
 March.
 Wyatt is tried and sentenced,
 but hopes
 of pardon
 are held
 out to him.

ing to what was required of him; but his revelations came out slowly, and to quicken his confession he was brought to trial on the 15th of March. He pleaded guilty to the indictment, and he then said that Courtenay had been the instigator of the conspiracy; he had written to Elizabeth, he said, to advise her to remove as far as possible from London, and Elizabeth had returned him a verbal message of thanks. This being not enough, he was sentenced to death; but he was made to feel that he might still earn his pardon if he would implicate Elizabeth more deeply; and though he said nothing definite, he allowed himself to drop vague hints that he could tell more if he pleased.*

At all events, however, sufficient evidence had par ceste grace de luy rendre la vie qu'elle en pourra tirer beaulcoup de bons et grandes services. Ce qui se faict par le moyen dudict ambassadeur de l'Empereur par l'advis duquel se conduisent aujourd'hui toutes les opinions d'icelle dame, et lequel traicte ceste composition avecques la femme dudict Wyatt à laquelle comme l'on dict il a asseuré la vie de sondict mari. — Noailles to the Constable of France, March 31. Renard's secrets were betrayed to Noailles by 'a corrupt secretary' of the Flemish embassy.—Wotton to the Queen: French MSS. bundle xi. State Paper Office.

* Noailles says: Wyatt a esté condamné a mourir; toutesfois il n'est encores executé et avant que luy prononçer sa sentence on luy avoit promis tant de belles choses que vaincu par leur doulces paroles outre sa deliberation, il a accusé beaulcoup de personnages et parlé au desavantage de mylord de Courtenay et de Madame Elizabeth. — Noailles to d'Oysel, March 29. The different parties were so much interested in Wyatt's confession, that his very last words are so wrapped round with contradictions, that one cannot tell what they were. It is certain, however, that he did implicate Elizabeth to some extent; it is certain, also, that he did not say enough for the purposes of the court, and that the court believed he could say more if he would; for, on Easter Sunday he communicated, and the queen was distressed that he been obtained in the opinion of the court for the committal of the Princess to the Tower. On the day of Wyatt's trial, the council met, but separated without a resolution; on Friday, the 16th, Elizabeth was examined before them in person; and when she withdrew, Gardiner required that she should be sent to the Tower instantly. Paget, supported by Sussex, Hastings, and Cornwallis, said that there was no evidence to justify so violent a measure.* Which of you, then, said Gardiner, with dexterous ingenuity, will be responsible for the safe keeping of her person?

CH. 31.
A.D. 1554.
March.

Gardiner proposes to send Elizabeth to the Tower. The council resist,

The guardian of Elizabeth would be exposed to a hundred dangers and a thousand suspicions; the Lords answered that Gardiner was conspiring their destruction. No one could be found courageous enough to undertake the charge, and they gave their reluctant consent to his demand. The same night Elizabeth's attendants were removed, a hundred soldiers were picketed in the garden below her window, and on Saturday morning the Marquis of Winchester and Lord Sussex waited on her to communicate her destination, and to attend her to a barge.

But at last reluctantly consent.

March 17.

should have been allowed to partake, while his confession was incomplete. As to Courtenay, Renard said he had communicated enough, 'mais quant à Elizabeth l'on ne peult encores tumber en preuves suffisantes pour les loys d'Angleterre contre elle.'—Renard to Charles V.: Rolls House MSS.

* Holinshed says that a certain lord exclaimed that there would be no safety for the realm until Elizabeth's head was off her shoulders; and either Holinshed himself, or his editor, wrote in the margin opposite, the words: 'The wicked advice of Lord Paget.'—Renard describes so distinctly the attitude of Paget, that there can be no doubt whatever of the injustice of such a charge against him.

CH. 31.
 A.D. 1554.
 March 17.

The terrible name of the Tower was like a death-knell; the Princess entreated a short delay till she could write a few words to the queen; the queen could not know the truth, she said, or else she was played upon by Gardiner. Alas! she did not know the queen: Winchester hesitated; Lord Sussex, more generous, accepted the risk, and promised, on his knees, to place her letter in the queen's hands.

The very lines traced by Elizabeth in that bitter moment may still be read in the State Paper Office,* and her hand was more than usually firm.

Elizabeth
 writes to
 the queen.

'If ever any one,' she wrote, 'did try this old saying that a king's word was more than another man's oath, I most humbly beseech your Majesty to verify it in me, and to remember your last promise, and my last demand, that I be not condemned without answer and due proof, which it seems that I now am: for that without cause proved I am by your council from you commanded to go unto the Tower, a place more wonted for a false traitor than a true subject: which, though I know I deserve it not, yet in the face of all this realm appears that it is proved; which I pray God that I may die the shamefullest death that any died, afore I may mean any such thing: and to this present hour I protest, afore God who shall judge my truth, whatsoever malice shall devise, that I never practised, counselled, nor consented to anything that might be prejudicial to your person anyway, or

* MS. Mary, Domestic, vol. iv. Printed by ELLIS, 2nd series, vol. ii. p. 255.

dangerous to the State by any means. And I therefore humbly beseech your Majesty to let me answer afore yourself, and not suffer me to trust to your councillors; yea, and that afore I go to the Tower, if it is possible; if not, afore I be further condemned. Howbeit, I trust assuredly your Highness will give me leave to do it afore I go, for that thus shamefully I may not be cried out on, as now I shall be, yea, and without cause. Let conscience move your Highness to take some better way with me, than to make me be condemned in all men's sight, afore my desert known. Also, I most humbly beseech your Highness to pardon this my boldness, which innocency procures me to do, together with hope of your natural kindness, which I trust will not see me cast away without desert: which what it is I would desire no more of God than that you truly knew; which thing, I think and believe, you shall never by report know, unless by yourself you hear. I have heard in my time of many cast away for want of coming to the presence of their prince; and in late days I heard my Lord of Somerset say that, if his brother had been suffered to speak with him, he had never suffered; but the persuasions were made to him so great, that he was brought in belief that he could not live safely if the admiral lived, and that made him give his consent to his death. Though these persons are not to be compared to your Majesty, yet I pray God as evil persuasions persuade not one sister against the other, and all for that they have heard false reports, and not hearken to

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
March 17.

CH. 31. the truth known; therefore, once again kneeling with all humbleness of my heart, because I am not suffered to bow the knees of my body, I humbly crave to speak with your Highness, which I would not be so bold to desire if I knew not myself most clear, as I know myself most true. And as for the traitor Wyatt, he might peradventure write me a letter, but on my faith I never received any from him; and for the copy of my letter sent to the French king, I pray God confound me eternally if ever I sent him word, message, token, or letter by any means:* and to this my truth I will stand to my death your Highness's most faithful subject that hath been from the beginning, and will be to the end.

A.D. 1554.
March 17.

‘ELIZABETH.

‘I humbly crave but one word of answer from yourself.’

Lord Sussex carries the letter, which produces only irritation.

Had Elizabeth known the history of those words of the queen to her, to which she appealed, she would have spared herself the trouble of writing this letter. Sussex fulfilled his promise, and during the delay the tide turned, and the barge could not pass London Bridge till the following day. The queen could not venture to send the Princess through the streets; and in dread lest, at the last moment, her prey should be snatched from her, she answered the appeal only by storming at the bearer, and at his friends in the council. 'They were going no good way,' she said, 'for their lives they durst not have acted so in her father's time; she wished that he was alive and among them but for a single month.'*

* As soon as Noailles learnt that his enclosure formed part of the case against Elizabeth, he came forward to acquit her of having furnished him with it; ‘jurant et blasphémant tous les sermens du monde pour la justification de la dicte Dame Elizabeth.’—Renard to Charles V., April 3: Rolls House MSS.

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
March 17.

At nine o'clock the next morning—it was Palm Sunday—the two Lords returned to Elizabeth to tell her that her letter had failed. As she crossed the garden to the water she threw up her eyes to the queen's window, but there was no sign of recognition. What do the Lords mean, she said, that they suffer me thus to be led into captivity? The barge was too deep to approach sufficiently near to the landing-place at the Tower to enable her to step upon the causeway without wetting her feet; it was raining too, and the petty inconveniences, fretting against the dreadful associations of the Traitors' Gate, shook her self-command. She refused to land; then sharply rejecting an offer of assistance, she sprung out upon the mud. 'Are all those harnessed men there for me?' she said to Sir John Gage, who was waiting with the Tower guard. 'No, madam,' Gage answered. 'Yes,' she said, 'I know it is so; it needed not for me, being but a weak woman. I never thought to have come in here a prisoner,' she went on, turning to the soldiers; 'I pray you all good fellows and friends, bear me witness that I come in no traitor, but as true a

Palm
Sunday,
March 18.Elizabeth
at Traitors' Gate.

* RENARD.

CH. 31. woman to the Queen's Majesty as any is now living, and thereon will I take my death.' She
 A.D. 1554. threw herself down upon a wet stone; Lord
 March. Chandos begged her to come under shelter out of the rain: 'better sitting here than in a worse place,' she cried; 'I know not whither you will bring me.'

Sussex
 warns the Lieutenant
 of the Tower to allow no
 foul play.

But it was not in Elizabeth's nature to protract a vain resistance; she rose, and passed on, and as she approached the room intended for her, the heavy doors along the corridor were locked and barred behind her. At the grating of the iron bolts the heart of Lord Sussex sank in him: Sussex knew the queen's true feelings, and the efforts which were made to lash her into cruelty; 'What mean ye, my Lords,' he said to Chandos and Gage, 'what will you do?' 'she was a king's daughter, and is the queen's sister; go no further than your commission, which I know what it is.'*

The chief danger was of murder—of some swift desperate act which could not be undone; the Lords who had so reluctantly permitted Elizabeth to be imprisoned would not allow her to be openly sacrificed, or indeed permit the queen to continue in the career of vengeance on which she had entered. The executions on account of the rebellion had not ceased even yet. In Kent, London, and in the midland counties, day after day, one, two, or more persons had been put to death; six gentlemen were, at that very moment, on their way to Maidstone and Rochester to suffer. The Lords, on the day of Elizabeth's committal, held a meeting while Gardiner was engaged elsewhere; they determined to remonstrate, and, if necessary, to insist on a change of course, and Paget undertook to be the bearer of the message. He found Mary in her oratory after vespers; he told her that the season might remind a sovereign of other duties besides revenge; already too much blood had been shed; the noble house of Suffolk was all but destroyed; and he said distinctly that if she attempted any more executions, he and his friends would interfere; the hideous scenes had lasted too long, and, as an earnest of a return to mercy, he demanded the pardon of the six gentlemen.

* Contemporary Narrative: Harleian MSS. 419. Chronicle of Queen Mary, p. 71. HOLINSHED.

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
March 18.
Palm Sunday.

Lord Paget
waits on
the queen,
and requires her
to end her
cruelties.

Mary, as she lamented afterwards to Renard, was unprepared; she was pressed in terms which showed that those who made the request did not intend to be refused—and she consented.* The six gentlemen escaped; and, following up this beginning, the council, in the course of the week, extorted from her the release of Northampton, Cobham, and one of his sons, with five others. In a report to the Emperor, Renard admitted that, if the queen attempted to continue her course of justice, there would be resistance; and the party of the chancellor, being the weakest, would in that case be overwhelmed. It was the more necessary, therefore, that, by one means or another, Elizabeth should be disposed

Various
prisoners
are released.

* Renard to Charles V., March 22: Rolls House MSS.

CH. 31. of. The queen had condescended to apologize to him for her second act of clemency, which she excused as being an Easter custom. It was not for him to find fault, he said that he had replied, if her Majesty was pleased to show mercy at the holy season; but it was his duty to remind her that he doubted whether the prince could be trusted with her.

A.D. 1554.

March.

Renard

taunts the queen, and hints that Philip must not come to her,

This argument never failed to drive Mary to madness; and, on the other side, Renard applied to Gardiner to urge despatch in bringing Elizabeth to trial: as long as she lived, he said, there was no security for the queen, for the prince, or for religion. Gardiner echoed the same opinion. If others, he said, would go to work as roundly as himself, all would be well.*

And insists on the death of Elizabeth.

April 2.
Parliament meets, not at Oxford, but at Westminster.

In this condition of the political atmosphere parliament assembled on the 2nd of April. The Oxford scheme had been relinquished as impracticable. The Lord Mayor informed the queen

* Il me replica que vivant Elizabeth il n'a espoir à la tranquillité du Royaulme, que quant à luy si chascun alloit si rondement en besoyne comme il fait, les choses se porteroient mieux. —Renard to the Emperor, April 3: Rolls House MSS. From these dark plotters, what might not be feared? Holinshed says that, while Elizabeth was in the Tower, a writ was sent down for her execution devised, as was believed, by Gardiner; and that Lord Chandos (Sir John Brydges the Lieutenant of the Tower) refused to put it in force. The story has been treated as a fable, and in the form in which it is told by Holinshed, it was very likely untrue: yet, in the presence of these infernal conversations, I think it highly probable that, as the hope of a judicial conviction grew fainter, schemes were talked of, and were perhaps tried, for cutting the knot in a decisive manner. In revolutionary times men feel that if to-day is theirs, to-morrow may be their enemies'; and they are not particularly scrupulous. The anxious words of Sussex did not refer to the merely barring a prisoner's door.

that he would not answer for the peace of the city in the absence of the court; the Tower might be surprised and the prisoners released; and to lose the Tower would be to lose the crown. The queen said that she would not leave London while her sister's fate was undetermined.* The Houses met, therefore, as usual, at Westminster, and the speech from the throne was read in Mary's presence by the chancellor.

CH. 31.
A.D. 1554.
April 2.

Since the last parliament, Gardiner said, the people of England had given proofs of unruly humour. The queen was their undoubted sovereign, and a measure would be submitted to the Lords and Commons to declare, in some emphatic manner, her claim to her subjects' obedience.

The chancellor tells the Houses the subjects which will be proposed for their consideration.

Her Majesty desiring, further, in compliance with her subjects' wishes, to take a husband, she had fixed her choice on the Prince of Spain, as a person agreeable to herself and likely to be a valuable friend to the realm: the people, however, had insolently and ignorantly presumed to mutiny against her intentions, and, in her affection for the commonwealth, her Majesty had consented to submit the articles of the marriage to the approval of parliament.

Again, her Majesty would desire them to take into their consideration the possible failure of the blood royal, and adopt necessary precautions to secure an undisturbed succession to the crown. It would be for the parliament to decide whether the privilege which had been granted to Henry

* RENARD.

CH. 31. VIII. of bequeathing the crown by will might not be, with propriety, extended to her present
 A.D. 1554. Majesty.*
 April.

Finally, and at great length, the chancellor spoke of religion. The late rebellion, he said, was properly a religious rebellion; it was the work of men who despised the sacraments, and were the enemies of truth, order, and godliness. A measure would be laid before the legislature for the better restraint of irregular license of opinion.

The marriage bill passes without opposition, and Lord Bedford sails for Spain to bring Philip.

The marriage was to pass quietly. Those of the Lords and Commons who persevered in their disapproval were a small minority, and did not intend to appear.† The bill, therefore, passed both Houses by the 12th of April.‡ The marriage articles were those originally offered by the Emperor, with the English clauses attached, and some explanatory paragraphs, that no room might be left for laxity of interpretation.§ Lord Bedford and Lord Fitzwalter had already gone to Plymouth, where a ship was in readiness to carry them to Spain. They waited only till the parliamentary forms were completed, and immediately sailed. Lord William Howard would go to sea with the fleet, at his earliest convenience, to protect the passage, and the prince might be expected in England by the end of May. The bill for the queen's authority was carried also without objection. The forms of English law running only in the name of a king, it had been pretended that a

The bill for the queen's authority passes.

* NOAILLES, vol. iii. p. 151.

† Renard to Charles V., April 7.

‡ 1 Mary, cap. ii.

§ See the treaty of marriage between Philip and Mary in RYMER.

queen could not be a lawful sovereign. A declaratory statute explained that the kingly prerogative was the same, whether vested in male or female.* CH. 31.
 Here, however, unanimity was at an end. The paragraph about the succession in the queen's speech being obviously aimed at Elizabeth, produced such an irritation in the council, as well as in parliament, that Renard expected it would end in actual armed conflict.† A.D. 1554.
 April.

From the day of Elizabeth's imprisonment Gardiner had laboured to extort evidence against her by fair means or foul.‡ She had been followed to the Tower by her servants. Sir John Gage desired that her food should be dressed by people of his own. The servants refused to allow themselves to be displaced,§ and, to the distress of Renard, angry words had been addressed to Gage by Lord Howard, so that they could not be removed by force.|| An attempt is made to remove Elizabeth's servants.
 Lord Howard threatens Sir John Gage.

The temptation of life having failed, after all, to induce Wyatt to enlarge his confession beyond his first acknowledgments, it was determined to execute him. On the 11th of April he

* 1 Mary, cap. i.

† Y a telle confusion que l'on n'attend sinon que la querelle se demesle par les armes et tumults.—Renard to Charles V., April 22.

‡ Holinshed says, Edmund Tremayne was racked, and I have already quoted Gardiner's letter to Petre, suggesting the racking of 'little Wyatt.'

§ Her Grace's cook said to him, My Lord, I will never suffer any stranger to come about her diet but her own sworn men as long as I live.—Harleian MSS. 419, and see HOLINSHED.

|| L'Admiral s'est coléré au grand chamberlain de la Royne que a la garde de la dicte Elizabeth et luy a dit qu'elle feroit encores trancher tant de testes que luy et autres s'en repentiroient.—Renard to Charles V., April 7.: Rolls House MSS.

CH. 31. was brought out of his cell, and on his way to the scaffold he was confronted with Courtenay, to whom he said something, but how much or what it is impossible to ascertain.* Finding that his death was inevitable, he determined to make the only reparation which was any longer in his power to Elizabeth. When placed on the platform, after desiring the people to pray for him, lamenting his crime, and expressing a hope that he might be the last person to suffer for the rebellion,
 he concluded thus:

Wyatt is
 taken to execution,
 and on the scaffold declares Elizabeth and Courtenay
 innocent.

‘Whereas it is said abroad that I should accuse my Lady Elizabeth’s Grace and my Lord Courtenay; it is not so, good people, for I assure you neither they nor any other now yonder in hold or durance was privy of my rising or commotion before I began.’†

The words, or the substance of them, were heard by every one. Weston, who attended as confessor, shouted, ‘Believe him not, good people! he confessed otherwise before the council.’

* Lord Chandos stated the same day in the House of Lords that he threw himself at Courtenay’s feet and implored him to confess the truth. The sheriffs of London, on the other hand, said that he implored Courtenay to forgive him for the false charges which he had brought against him and against Elizabeth.—FOXE, vol. vi. Compare Chronicle of Queen Mary, p. 72, note.

† So far the Chronicle of Queen Mary, Holinshed, Stow, and the narratives among the Harleian MSS. essentially agree. But the chronicle followed by Stow makes Wyatt add, ‘As I have declared no less to the queen’s council;’ whereas Foxe says that he admitted that he had spoken otherwise to the council, but had spoken untruly. Noailles tells all that was really important in a letter to d’Oysel: ‘M. Wyatt eust le testé coupée, deschargeant avant que de mourir Madame Elizabeth et Courtenay qu’il avoit auparavant chargé de s’estre entendus en son entreprinse sur promesses que l’on luy avoit faictes de luy saulver la vie.’ — NOAILLES, vol. iii.

‘That which I said then I said,’ answered Wyatt, CH. 31.
 ‘but that which I say now is true.’ The executioner did his office, and Wyatt’s work, for A.D. 1554.
 April.
 good or evil, was ended.

All that the court had gained by his previous confessions was now more than lost. London rang with the story that Wyatt, in dying, had cleared Courtenay and Elizabeth.* Gardiner still thundered in the Star Chamber on the certainty of their guilt, and pilloried two decent citizens who had repeated Wyatt’s words; but his efforts were vain, and the hope of a legal conviction was at an end. The judges declared that against Elizabeth there was now no evidence;† and, even if there had been evidence, Renard wrote to his master, that the court could not dare to proceed further against her, from fear of Lord William Howard, who had the whole naval force of England at his disposal, and, in indignation at Elizabeth’s treatment, might join the French and the exiles.‡ Perplexed to know how to dispose of her, the ambassador and the chancellor thought of sending her off to Pomfret Castle; doubtless, if once within Pomfret walls, to find the fate of the Second Richard there: but again the spectre of Lord Howard terrified them.

The judges declare that there is no evidence against Elizabeth. Gardiner proposes to send her to Pomfret.

* Courtenay, however, certainly was guilty; and had Wyatt acquitted Elizabeth without naming Courtenay, his words would have been far more effective than they were. This, however, it was hard for Wyatt to do, as it would have been equivalent to a repetition of his accusations.

† Les gens de loy ne treuvent matière pour la condamner.—Renard to Charles V., April 22: TYTLER, vol. ii.

‡ Ibid. And see a passage in the MS., which Mr. Tytler has omitted.

CH. 31.
 A.D. 1554.
 April.

Sir Nicholas Throgmorton is tried, and acquitted.

The threatened escape of her sister, too, was but the beginning of the queen's sorrows. On the 17th of April Sir Nicholas Throgmorton was tried at the Guildhall for having been a party to the conspiracy. The confessions of many of the prisoners had more or less implicated Throgmorton. Cuthbert Vaughan, who was out with Wyatt, swore in the court that Throgmorton had discussed the plan of the insurrection with him; and Throgmorton himself admitted that he had talked to Sir Peter Carew and Wyatt about the probability of a rebellion. He it was, too, who was to have conducted Courtenay to Andover on his flight into Devonshire; and the evidence* leaves very little doubt that he was concerned as deeply as any one who did not actually take up arms. Sir Nicholas, however, defended himself with resolute pertinacity; he fought through all the charges against him, and dissected the depositions with the skill of a practised pleader; and in the end, the jury returned the bold verdict of 'Not guilty.' Sir Thomas Bromley urged them to remember themselves. The foreman answered they had found the verdict according to their consciences.

Their consciences probably found less difficulty in the facts charged against Throgmorton than in the guilt to be attached to them. The verdict was intended as a rebuke to the cruelty with which the rebellion had been punished, and it was received as an insult to the crown. The crowd,

* It is printed at length in HOLINSHED.

as Throgmorton left the court, threw up their caps and shouted. The queen was ill for three days with mortification,* and insisted that the jurors should be punished. They were arrested, and kept as prisoners till the following winter, when they were released on payment of the ruinous fine of 2000*l*. Throgmorton himself was seized again on some other pretext, and sent again to the Tower. The council, or Paget's party there, remonstrated against the arrest; they yielded, however, perhaps that they might make the firmer stand on more important matters.

CH. 31.
A. D. 1554.
April.

The jury
are arrested, and punished.

Since Elizabeth could not be executed, the court were the more anxious to carry the Succession Bill. Gardiner's first desire was that Elizabeth should be excluded by name; but Paget said that this was impossible.† As little could a measure be passed empowering the queen to leave the crown by will, for that would be but the same thing under another form. Following up his purpose, notwithstanding, Gardiner brought out in the House of Lords a pedigree, tracing Philip's descent from John of Gaunt; and he introduced a bill to make offences against his person high treason. But at the second reading the important words were introduced, 'during the queen's

Gardiner
desires to introduce an act into parliament
to disinherit
Elizabeth,
which Paget will not permit.

* Que tant alteré la dicte dame qu'elle a esté trois jours malade, et n'est encores bien d'elle.—Renard to Charles V. : TYTLER, vol. ii. p. 374.

† He whom you wrote of comes to me with a sudden and strange proposal, that, since matters against Madame Elizabeth do not take the turn which was wished, there should be an act brought into parliament to disinherit her. I replied that I would give no consent to such a scheme. — Paget to Renard : TYTLER, vol. ii. p. 382.

CH. 31. lifetime;* the bill was read a third time, and A.D. 1554. then disappeared; and Paget had been the April. loudest of its opponents.†

Gardiner
 carries a Persecution Bill in the House
 of Commons.

Paget,
 however,
 opposes it
 in the Upper House.

Beaten on the succession, the chancellor, in spite of Renard's remonstrances, brought forward next his Religious Persecution Bills. The House of Commons went with him to some extent; and, to secure success in some form or other, he introduced three separate measures, either of which would answer his purpose—a Bill for the restoration of the Six Articles, a Bill to re-enact the Lollard Statute of Henry IV., De Heretico Comburendo, and a Bill to restore (in more than its original vigour) the Episcopal Jurisdiction. The Six Articles had so bad a name that the first bill was read once only, and was dropped; the two others passed the Commons,‡ and, on the 26th of April, the Bishops' Authority Bill came before the Lords. Lord Paget was so far in advance of his time that he could not hope to appeal with a chance of success to his own principles of judicious latitudinarianism; but he determined, if possible, to prevent Gardiner's intended cruelties from taking effect, and he spread an alarm that, if the bishops were restored to their unrestricted powers, under one form or other the holders of the abbey lands would be at their mercy. To allay the suspicion, another bill was carried through the Commons, providing expressly for the safety of the holders of those lands; but

* Lords Journals.

† Renard complains of Paget's conduct bitterly. — Renard to

Charles V., May 1: TYTLER, vol. ii.

‡ Commons Journals.

the tyranny of the Episcopal Courts was so recent, and the ecclesiastics had shown themselves uniformly so little capable of distinguishing between right and wrong when the interests of religion were at stake, that the jealousy, once aroused, could not be checked. The irritation became so hot and so general as to threaten again the most dangerous consequences; and Paget, pretending to be alarmed at the excitement which he had raised, urged Renard to use his influence with the queen to dissolve parliament.*

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
April.

Renard, who was only anxious that the marriage should go off quietly, agreed in the desirableness of a dissolution. He told the queen that the reform of religion must be left to a better opportunity; and the prince could not, and should not, set his foot in a country where parties were forever on the edge of cutting each other's throats. It was no time for her to be indulging Gardiner in humours which were driving men mad, and shutting her ears to the advice of those who could ruin her if they pleased; she must think first of her husband. The queen protested that Gardiner was acting by no advice of hers; Gardiner, she said, was obstinate, and would listen to no one; she herself was helpless and miserable. But Renard was not to be moved by misery. At all events, he said, the prince should not come till late in the summer, perhaps not till autumn, not, in fact, till it could be seen what form these wild

Renard tells the queen that Gardiner must be kept in order.

Philip cannot come into so wild a country.

* Paget to Renard: TYTLER, vol. ii. p. 382. And compare Renard's correspondence with the Emperor during the month of April.—Rolls House MSS.

CH. 31. humours would assume; summer was the dangerous time in England, when the people's blood was apt to boil.*

A.D. 1554.
April.

A committee of Convocation condemn Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer.

April 20.

Gardiner, however, was probably not acting without Mary's secret approbation. Both the queen and the minister especially desired, at that moment, the passing of the Heresy Bill, and Renard was obliged to content himself with a promise that the dissolution should be as early as possible. Though parliament could not meet at Oxford, a committee of Convocation had been sitting there, with Doctor Weston, the adulterous Dean of Windsor, for a president. Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer had been called upon to defend their opinions, which had been pronounced false and damnable. They had been required to recant, and, having refused, they were sentenced, so far as the power of the court extended, to the punishment of heretics.

Cranmer appealed from the judgment to God Almighty, in whose presence he would soon stand.

Ridley said the sentence would but send them the sooner to the place where else they hoped to go.

Latimer said, 'I thank God that my life has been prolonged that I may glorify God by this kind of death.'

Hooper, Ferrars, Coverdale, Taylor, Philpot, and Sandars, who were in London prisons, were to have been simultaneously tried and sentenced at Cambridge. These six, however, drew and signed a joint refusal to discuss their faith in a court before which they were to be brought as prisoners; and for some reason the proceedings against them were suspended; but whether they refused or consented was of little moment to the Bishop of Winchester; they were in his hands—he could try them when he pleased. A holocaust of heresiarchs was waiting to be offered up, and before a faggot could be lighted, the necessary powers had to be obtained from parliament.

* Pour ce qui ordinairement les humeurs des Angloys boullissent plus en l'esté que en autre temps.

CH. 31.
A.D. 1554.
April.

The bishop, therefore, was determined, if possible, to obtain those powers. He had the entire bench of prelates on his side; and Lord Howard, the Earl of Bedford, and others of the lay lords who would have been on the side of humanity, were absent. The opposition had to be conducted under the greatest difficulties. Paget, however, fought the battle, and fought it on broad grounds: the Bishops' bill was read twice; on the third reading, on the 1st of May, he succeeded in throwing it out: the Lollards' bill came on the day after, and here his difficulty was far greater; for toleration was imperfectly understood by Catholic or Protestant, and many among the peers, who hated the bishops, equally hated heresy. Paget, however, spoke out his convictions, and protested against the iniquity of putting men to death for their opinions.* The bill was read a first time on the day on which it was introduced; on the 4th of May it was read again,† but it went no

And Gardiner determines to obtain powers, if possible, to burn them;

May 1.

May 2.

But Paget succeeds in defeating him.

* Quant l'on a parlé de la peyne des heretiques, il a sollicité les sieurs pour non y consentir, y donner lieu à peyne de mort.—Renard to Charles V., May 1.

† Lords Journals.

CH. 31. further. The next day parliament was dissolved.
 A.D. 1554. The peers assured the queen that they had no
 May. desire to throw a shield over heresy; the common law existed independent of statute, and the common law prescribed punishments which could still be inflicted.* But, so long as heresy was undefined, Anabaptists, Socinians, or professors of the more advanced forms of opinion, could alone fall within the scope of punishments merely traditional.

Danger of an outbreak in
 the council.

The tempers of men were never worse than at that moment Renard wrote. In the heat of the debate, on the 28th of April, Lord Thomas Grey was executed as a defiance to the liberal party. Gardiner persuaded the queen, perhaps not without reason, that he was himself in danger

* There can, I think, be no doubt that it was this which the peers said. The statute of Henry IV. was not passed; yet the Queen told Renard, 'que le peyne antienne contre les heretiques fut agreé par toute la noblesse, et qu'ilz farent dire expressement et publiquement qu'ilz entendoient l'heresie estre extirpée et punie.' The chancellor informed Renard that, 'although the Heresy Bill was lost, there were penalties of old standing against heretics which had still the form of law, and could be put in execution.' And, on the 3rd of May, the Privy Council directed the judges and the queen's learned counsel to be called together, and their opinions demanded, 'what they think in law her Highness may do touching the cases of Cranmer, Ridley, Latimer, being already, by both the universities of Oxford and Cambridge, judged to be obstinate heretics, which matter is the rather to be consulted upon, for that the said Cranmer is already attainted.'—MS. Privy Council Register. The answer of the judges I have not found, but it must have been unfavourable to the intentions of the court. Joan Bocher was burnt under the common law, for her opinions were condemned by all parties in the Church, and were looked upon in the same light as witchcraft, or any other profession definitely devilish. But it was difficult to treat as heresy, under the common law, a form of belief which had so recently been sanctioned by act of parliament.

of being arrested by Paget and Pembroke;* and an order was sent to the Lieutenant of the Tower that if the chancellor was brought thither under warrant of the council only, he was not to be received.†

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
May.

On the other hand, twelve noblemen and gentlemen undertook to stand by Mary if she would arrest Paget and Pembroke. The chancellor, Sir Robert Rochester, and the Marquis of Winchester discussed the feasibility of seizing them; but Lord Howard and the Channel fleet were thought to present too formidable an obstacle. With the queen's sanction, however, they armed in secret. It was agreed that, on one pretence or another, Derby, Shrewsbury, Sussex, and Huntingdon should be sent out of London to their counties. Elizabeth, if it could be managed, should be sent to Pomfret, as Gardiner had before proposed; Lord Howard should be kept at sea; and, if opportunity offered, Arundel and Paget might, at least, be secured.‡

The Catholics undertake to stand by the queen in event of danger.

But Pomfret was impossible, and vexation thickened on vexation. Lord Howard was becoming a bugbear at the court. Report now said that two of the Staffords, whom he had named to command in the fleet, had joined the exiles in France; and for Lord Howard himself the queen could feel no security, if he was provoked too far. She was haunted by a misgiving that, while the prince was under his convoy, he might declare

The court is in terror of Lord Howard of Effingham.

* Renard to Charles V., May 13: Rolls House MSS.

† NOAILLES.

‡ Renard to Charles V., May 13: TYTLER, vol. ii.

CH. 31. against her, and carry him prisoner to France; or if Howard could himself be trusted, his fleet could not. On the eve of sailing for the coast of Spain, a mutiny broke out at Plymouth. The sailors swore that if they were forced on a service which they detested, both the admiral and the prince should rue it. Lord Howard, in reporting to the queen the men's misconduct, said that his own life was at her Majesty's disposal, but he advised her to reconsider the prudence of placing the prince in their power. Howard's own conduct, too, was far from reassuring. A few small vessels had been sent from Antwerp to join the English fleet, under the Flemish admiral Chappelle. Chappelle complained that Howard treated him with indifference, and insulted his ships by 'calling them cockle-shells.' If the crews of the two fleets were on land anywhere together, the English lost no opportunity of making a quarrel, 'hustling and pushing' the Flemish sailors;* and, as if finally to complete the queen's vexation, Lord Bedford wrote that the prince declined the protection of her subjects on his voyage, and that his departure was postponed for a few weeks longer.

The fleet had to remain in the Channel; it could not be trusted elsewhere; and the necessity of releasing Elizabeth from the Tower was another annoyance to the queen. A confinement at Woodstock was the furthest stretch of severity that the country would, for the present, permit.

A.D. 1554.
May.
The sailors
in the fleet
are insub-
ordinate,

And Howard affronts
the Flemish
admiral.

Elizabeth is taken to Woodstock.

On the 19th of May, Elizabeth was taken up the river. The princess believed herself that she was being carried off tanquam ovis, as she said—as a sheep for the slaughter. But the world thought that she was set at liberty, and as her barge passed under the Bridge Mary heard, with indignation, from the palace windows, three salvoes of artillery fired from the Steelyard, as a sign of the joy of the people.* A letter from Philip would have been a consolation to her in the midst of the troubles which she had encountered for his sake; but the languid lover had never written a line to her; or, if he had written, not a line had reached her hand; only a ship which contained despatches from him for Renard had been taken, in the beginning of May, by a French cruiser, and the thought that precious words of affection had, perhaps, been on their way to her and were lost, was hard to bear.

* Les ont provoqué à debatz, les cerrans et poulans.—Renard to Charles V.: TYTLER, vol. ii. p. 413.

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
May.

Philip does
not write
to the
queen.

In vain she attempted to cheer her spirits with the revived ceremonials of Whitsuntide. She marched, day after day, in procession, with canopies and banners, and bishops in gilt slippers, round St. James's, round St. Martin's, round Westminster.† Sermons and masses alternated, now with religious feasts, now with Diriges for her

She seeks for comfort
in the ceremonials of
the Church.

* Samedi dernier Elizabeth fut tirée de la Tour et menée a Richmond; et dois ledict Richmond l'on l'a conduit a Woodstock pour y estre gardée surement jusques l'on la fasse aller à Pomfret. Et s'est resjouy le peuple de sa departye pensant qu'elle fut en liberté, et passant par devant la Maison des Still-yards ilz tirerent trois coups d'artillerie en signe d'allegrie, que la reyne et son conseil ont prins a desplaisir et regret, et estimons que l'on en fera demonstration.—Renard to Charles V.: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv.

† Machyn's Diary; STEYKE'S Memorials of the Reformation.

CH. 31. father's soul. But all was to no purpose; she
 A.D. 1554. could not cast off her anxieties, or escape from
 May. the shadow of her subjects' hatred, which clung to her steps. Insolent pamphlets were dropped in her path and in the offices of Whitehall; she trod upon them in the passages of the palace;
 they were placed by mysterious hands in the sanctuary of her bedroom. At length, chafed with a thousand irritations, and craving for a husband who showed so small anxiety to come to her, she fled from London, at the beginning of June, to Richmond.

Her mind
 is shaken,
 and she grows hysterical.

The trials of the last six months had begun to tell upon Mary's understanding: she was ill with hysterical longings; ill with the passions which Gardiner had kindled and Paget disappointed.
 A lady who slept in her room told Noailles that she could speak to no one without impatience,
 and that she believed the whole world was in a league to keep her husband from her. She found fault with every one—even with the prince himself. Why had he not written? she asked again and again. Why had she never received one courteous word from him? If she heard of merchants or sailors arriving from Spain, she would send for them and question them; and some would tell her that the prince was said to have little heart for his business in England; others
 terrified her with tales of fearful fights upon the seas; and others brought her news of the French squadrons that were on the watch in the Channel.*

* Le doute luy est souvent | chants mariniere et autres mal-
 augmentée par plusieurs mar- | contens de son mariage qui

She would start out of her sleep at night, picturing a thousand terrors, and among them one to which all else were insignificant, that her prince, who had taken such wild possession of her imagination, had no answering feeling for herself—that, with her growing years and wasted figure, she could never win him to love her.*

CH. 31.
A.D. 1554.
June.

‘The unfortunate queen,’ wrote Henry of France, ‘will learn the truth at last. She will wake too late, in misery and remorse, to know that she has filled the realm with blood for an object which, when she has gained it, will bring nothing but affliction to herself or to her people.’†

She receives comfort from the University of Oxford.

But the darkest season has its days of sunshine, and Mary's trials were for the present over. If the statesmen were disloyal, the clergy and the universities appreciated her services to the Church, and, in the midst of her trouble, Oxford congratulated her on having been raised up for the restoration of life and light to England.‡ More venans de France et Espaign luy desguisent et luy controuvent un infinité de nouvelles estranges, les ungs du peu de volonté que le prince a de venir par decà, les aultres d'avoir ouy et entendus combats sur la mer et plusieurs d'avoir desouvert grand nombre de voisles Françoises avec grand appareil.—Noailles to the King of France: Ambassades, vol. iii. p. 253.

* L'on m'a dict que quelques heures de la nuict elle entre en telle resverie de ses amours et passions que bien souvent elle se met hors de soy, et croy que la plus grande occasion de sa douleur vient du desplaisir qu'elle a de veoir sa personne si diminuée et ses ans multiplier en telle nombre qu'ilz luy courent tous les jours a grande interest.—Ibid. p. 252.

† Ibid. p. 255.

‡ Nuper cum litterarum studia pene extincta jacerent cum salus omnium exigua spe dubiaque penderet quis non fortunæ incertos eventus extimescebat? Quis non ingemuit et arsit dolore? Pars studia deserere cogebantur; pars huc illucque

CH. 31. pleasant than this pleasant flattery was the arrival,
 A.D. 1554. on the 19th of June, of the Marquis de las Navas June. from Spain, with the news that by that time the prince was on his way.

Philip will come,

Precautions being taken for his safety.

It was even so. Philip had submitted to his unwelcome destiny, and six thousand troops being required pressingly by the Emperor in the Low Countries, they attended him for his escort. A paper of advices was drawn for the prince's use by Renard, directing him how to accommodate himself to his barbarous fortune. Neither soldiers nor mariners would be allowed to land. The noblemen, therefore, who formed his retinue, were advised to bring Spanish musketeers, disguised in liveries, in the place of pages and lacqueys; their arms could be concealed amidst the baggage. The war would be an excuse for the noblemen being armed themselves, and the prince, on landing, should have a shirt of mail under his doublet. As to manner, he must endeavour to be affable: he would have to hunt with the young lords, and to make presents to them; and, with whatever difficulty, he must learn a few words of English, to exchange the ordinary salutations. As a friend, Renard recommended Paget to him; he would find Paget 'a man of sense.'*

Philip, who was never remarkable for personal courage, may be pardoned for having come reluc-

quovis momento rapiebantur; nec ulli certus ordo suumve propositum diu constabat. — The happy change of the last year was then contrasted with proper point and prolixity.—The University of Oxford to the Queen: MS. Domestic, Mary, vol. iv.

* 'Homme d'esprit.' — Instructions données à Philippe, Prince d'Espagne: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv. p. 267.

stantly to a country where he had to bring men-at-arms for servants, and his own cook for fear of being poisoned. The sea, too, was hateful to him, for he suffered miserably from sickness. Nevertheless, he was coming, and with him such a retinue of gallant gentlemen as the world has rarely seen together. The Marquis de los Valles, Gonzaga, d'Aguilar, Medina Celi, Antonio de Toledo, Diego de Mendoza, the Count de Feria, the Duke of Alva, Count Egmont, and Count Horn — men whose stories are written in the annals of two worlds: some in letters of glorious light, some in letters of blood which shall never be washed out while the history of mankind survives. Whether for evil or good, they were not the meek innocents for whom Renard had at one time asked so anxiously.

CH. 31.
A.D. 1554.
June.

In company with these noblemen was Sir Thomas Gresham, charged with half a million of money in bullion, out of the late arrivals from the New World; which the Emperor, after taking security from the London merchants, had lent the queen, perhaps to enable her to make her marriage palatable by the restoration of the currency.*

Gresham brings money from Spain.

Thus preciously freighted, the Spanish fleet, a hundred and fifty ships, large and small, sailed from Corunna at the beginning of July. The voyage was weary and wretched. The sea-sickness prostrated both the prince and the troops,

The Spanish fleet
sails from Corunna.

* Gresham's Correspondence: Flanders MSS. State Paper Office. The bullion was afterwards drawn in procession in carts through the London streets.

CH. 31. and to the sea-sickness was added the terror of the French—a terror, as it happened, needless,
 A.D. 1554. for the English exiles, by whom the prince was June. to have been intercepted, had, in the last few weeks, melted away from the French service, with the exception of a few who were at Scilly. Sir Peter Carew, for some unknown reason, had written to ask for his pardon, and had gone to Italy;* but the change was recent and unknown,
 and the ships stole along in silence, the orders of the prince being that not a salute should be fired to catch the ear of an enemy.† At last, on the 19th of July, the white cliffs of Freshwater were sighted; Lord Howard lay at the Needles with the English fleet; and on Friday, the 20th, at three o'clock in the afternoon, the flotilla was safely anchored in Southampton Water.

It advances
cautiously,
in fear of
the French,

But brings Philip at last safe to Southampton.

The Lords
of the Council
are in waiting to receive him,

The queen was on her way to Winchester, where she arrived the next morning, and either in attendance upon her, or waiting at Southampton, was almost the entire peerage of England. Having made up their minds to endure the marriage, the Lords resolved to give Philip the welcome which was due to the husband of their sovereign, and in the uncertain temper of the people, their presence might be necessary to protect his person from insult or from injury.

It was an age of glitter, pomp, and pageantry;

* Wotton's Correspondence: French MSS. State Paper Office. The title of the Queen of Scots was, perhaps, the difficulty; or Carew may have felt that he could do nothing of real consequence, while he might increase the difficulty of protecting Elizabeth.

† Noailles to the King of France, July 23: Ambassades, vol. iii.

the anchors were no sooner down, than a barge was in readiness, with twenty rowers in the queen's colours of green and white; and Arundel, Pembroke, Shrewsbury, Derby, and other lords went off to the vessel which carried the royal standard of Castile. Philip's natural manner was cold and stiff, but he had been schooled into graciousness. Exhausted by his voyage, he accepted delightedly the instant invitation to go on shore, and he entered the barge accompanied by the Duke of Alva. A crowd of gentlemen was waiting to receive him at the landing-place. As he stepped out—not perhaps without some natural nervousness and sharp glances round him—the whole assemblage knelt. A salute was fired from the batteries, and Lord Shrewsbury presented him with the order of the Garter.* An enthusiastic eye-witness thus describes Philip's appearance:—

CH. 31.
A.D. 1554.
July 20.

And some among the spectators look upon him with enthusiasm.

‘Of visage he is well-favoured, with a broad forehead and grey eyes, straight-nosed and manly countenance. From the forehead to the point of his chin his face groweth small. His pace is princely, and gait so straight and upright as he loseth no inch of his height; with a yellow head and a yellow beard; and thus to conclude, he is so well proportioned of body, arm, leg, and every other limb to the same, as nature cannot work a

* Antiquaries dispute whether Philip received the Garter on board his own vessel, or after he came on shore. Lord Shrewsbury himself settles the important point. ‘I, the Lord

Steward,’ Shrewsbury wrote to Wotton, ‘at his coming to land, presented the Garter to him.’—French MSS. Mary, State Paper Office.

CH. 31. more perfect pattern, and, as I have learned, of A.D. 1554. the age of 28 years. His Majesty I judge to be July. of a stout stomach, pregnant-witted, and of most gentle nature.*

He goes to
 church,

Sir Anthony Browne approached, leading a horse with a saddle-cloth of crimson velvet, embroidered with gold and pearls. He presented the steed, with a Latin speech, signifying that he was his Highness's Master of the Horse; and Philip, mounting, went direct to Southampton church, the English and Spanish noblemen attending bareheaded, to offer thanks for his safe arrival. From the church he was conducted to a house which had been furnished from the royal stores for his reception. Everything was, of course, magnificent. Only there had been one single oversight. Wrought upon the damask hangings, in conspicuous letters, were observed the ominous words, 'Henry, by the Grace of God, King of England, France, and Ireland, and Supreme Head of the Church of England.'†

And thence to a banquet, where he makes a speech.

Here the prince was to remain till Monday to recover from his voyage; perhaps to ascertain, before he left the neighbourhood of his own fleet, the humour of the barbarians among whom he had arrived. In Latin (he was unable to speak French) he addressed the Lords on the causes which had brought him to England, the chief

* John Elder to the Bishop of Caithness: Queen Jane and Queen Mary, appendix 10. Elder adds that his stature was about that of a certain 'John Hume, my Lord of Jedward's kinsman,' which does not help our information. Philip, however, was short.

† BACARDO.

among those causes being the manifest will of God, to which he felt himself bound to submit. It was noticed that he never lifted his cap in speaking to any one,* but he evidently endeavoured to be courteous. With a stomach unrecovered from the sea, and disdaining precautions, he sate down on the night of his arrival to a public English supper; he even drained a tankard of ale, as an example, he said, to his Spanish companions.† The first evening passed off well, and he retired to seek such rest as the strange land and strange people, the altered diet, and the firing of guns, which never ceased through the summer night, would allow him.

CH. 31

A.D. 1554.
July 31.

Another feature of his new country awaited Philip in the morning; he had come from the sunny plains of Castile; from his window at Southampton he looked out upon a steady downfall of July rain. Through the cruel torrent‡ he made his way to the church again to mass, and afterwards Gardiner came to him from the queen. In the afternoon the sky cleared, and the Duchess of Alva, who had accompanied her husband, was taken out in a barge upon Southampton Water. Both English and Spanish exerted themselves to be mutually pleasing; but the situation was not of a kind which it was desirable to protract. Six thousand Spanish troops were cooped in the close uneasy transports, forbidden to land lest they should provoke the jealousy of the

An English
July.

* Non havendo mai levato la berretta a persona.—BAOARDO.

† NOAILLES.

‡ Crudele pioggia.—BAOARDO.

CH. 31. people; and when, on Sunday, his Highness had to undergo a public dinner, in which English servants only were allowed to attend upon him, the Castilian lords, many of whom believed that they had come to England on a bootless errand, broke out into murmurs.*

A.D. 1554.
 July 22.

July 23. Monday came at last; the rain fell again, and the wind howled. The baggage was sent forward in the morning in the midst of the tempest. Philip lingered in hopes of a change; but no change came,
 and after an early dinner the trumpet sounded to horse. Lords, knights, and gentlemen had thronged into the town, from curiosity or interest, out of all the counties round. Before the prince mounted it was reckoned, with uneasiness, that as many as four thousand cavaliers, under no command, were collected to join the cavalcade.

A grey gelding was led up for Philip; he wrapped himself in a scarlet cloak, and started to meet his bride—to complete a sacrifice the least congenial, perhaps, which ever policy of state exacted from a prince.

The ride to Winchester
 in the rain.

The train could move but slowly. Two miles beyond the gates a drenched rider, spattered with chalk mud, was seen galloping towards them; on reaching the prince he presented him with a ring
 from the queen, and begged his Highness, in her Majesty's name, to come no further. The messenger could not explain the cause, being unable to

* La Dominica Mattina se n'ando a messa et tornato a casa mangio in publico servito da gli officiali che gli haveva data la Reina con mala satisfattione de gli Spagnuoli i quali dubitando che la cosa non andasse a lungo mormoravano assai tra di loro.—
 BAOARDO.

speak any language which Philip could understand; and visions of commotion instantly presented themselves, mixed, it may be, with a hope that the bitter duty might yet be escaped. Alva was immediately at his master's side; they reined
 up, and were asking each other anxiously what should next be done, when an English lord exclaimed in French, with courteous irony, 'Our queen, sire, loves your Highness so tenderly that she would not have you come to her in such wretched weather.'* The hope, if hope there had been, died in its birth; before sunset, with drenched garments and draggled plume, the object of so many anxieties arrived within the walls of Winchester.

CH. 31.

 A.D. 1554.
 July 23.

To the cathedral he went first, wet as he was.
 Whatever Philip of Spain was entering upon,
 whether it was a marriage or a massacre, a state
 intrigue or a midnight murder, his opening step
 was ever to seek a blessing from the holy wafer.
 He entered, kissed the crucifix, and knelt and prayed before the altar; then taking his seat
 in the choir, he remained while the choristers sang a Te Deum laudamus, till the long aisles grew dim in the summer twilight, and he was conducted by torchlight to the Deanery.

The queen was at the bishop's palace, but a few hundred yards distant. Philip, doubtless,
 could have endured the postponement of an interview till morning; but Mary could not wait, and

* 'Sire, la Nostra Reina ama tanto l'Altezza vostra ch'ella non vorebbe che pigliasse disagio di caminar per tempi cosi tristi.'— BAOARDO.

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.

July 23.

Philip and
the queen
meet.The marriage, and
the result
of it.

the same night he was conducted into the presence of his haggard bride, who now, after a life of misery, believed herself at the open gate of Paradise. Let the curtain fall over the meeting, let it close also over the wedding solemnities which followed with due splendour two days later. There are scenes in life which we regard with pity too deep for words. The unhappy queen, unloved, unloveable, yet with her parched heart thirsting for affection, was flinging herself upon a breast to which an iceberg was warm; upon a man to whom love was an unmeaning word, except as the most brutal of passions. For a few months she created for herself an atmosphere of unreality. She saw in Philip the ideal of her imagination, and in Philip's feelings the reflex of her own; but the dream passed away—her love for her husband remained; but remained only to be a torture to her. With a broken spirit and bewildered understanding, she turned to Heaven for comfort, and, instead of heaven, she saw only the false roof of her creed painted to imitate and shut out the sky.

The scene will change for a few pages to the Low Countries. Charles V. more than any other person was responsible for this marriage. He had desired it not for Mary's sake, not for Philip's sake, not for religion's sake; but that he might be able to assert a decisive preponderance over France; and, to gain his end, he had already led the queen into a course which had forfeited the regard of her subjects. She had murdered Lady

Jane Grey at the instigation of his ambassador, and under the same influence she had done her best to destroy her sister. Yet Charles, notwithstanding, was one of nature's gentlemen. If he was unscrupulous in the sacrifice of others to his purposes, he never spared himself; and in the days of his successes he showed to less advantage than now, when, amidst failing fortunes and ruined health, his stormy career was closing.

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.
July.

In the spring he had been again supposed to be dying. His military reputation had come out tarnished from his failure at Metz, and while he was labouring with imperfect success to collect troops for a summer's campaign, Henry of France, unable to prevent the English marriage, was preparing to strike a blow so heavy, as should enable him to dictate peace on his own terms before England was drawn into the quarrel.

In June two French armies took the field. Pietro Strozzi advanced from Piedmont into Tuscany. Henry himself, with Guise, Montmorency, and half the peerage of France, entered the Low Countries, sweeping all opposition before him. First Marienbourg fell, then Dinant fell, stormed with especial gallantry. The young French nobles were taught that they must conquer or die: a party of them flinched in the breach at Dinant, and the next morning Henry sate in judgment upon them sceptre in hand; some were hanged, the rest degraded from their rank: 'and whereas one privilege of the gentlemen of France was to be exempt from taylles

The French
enter Belgium in overwhelming
force.

CH. 31. payable to the crown, they were made tayllable
as any other villains.*

A.D. 1554.
July.

From Dinant the French advanced to Namur. When Namur should have fallen, Brussels was the next aim; and there was nothing, as it seemed, which could stop them. The Imperial army under the Prince of Savoy could but hover, far outnumbered, on their skirts. The reinforcements from Spain had not arrived, and a battle lost was the loss of Belgium.

Charles
leaves his sick bed,
and flies to
the army.

In the critical temper of England, a decisive superiority obtained by France would be doubly dangerous; and Charles, seeing Philibert perplexed into uncertain movements which threatened misfortune, disregarding the remonstrances of his physicians, his ministers, and his generals, started from his sick bed, flew to the head of his troops, and brought them to Namur, in the path of the advancing French. Men said that he was rushing upon destruction. The headstrong humour which had already worked him so heavy injury was again dragging him into ruin.† But

* Wotton to the Queen; cypher: French MSS. Mary, bundle xi.

† 'You shall understand that the Emperor hath suddenly caused his army to march towards Namur, and that himself is gone after in person; the deliberation whereof, both of the one and the other, is against the advice of his council, and all other men to the staying of him. Wherein Albert the Duke of Savoy, John Baptiste Castaldo, Don Hernando de Gonzaga, and

Andrea Doria have done their best, as well by letter as by their coming from the camp to this town, vivâ voce alleging to him the puissance of his enemy, the unhableness as yet of his army to encounter with them, the danger of the chopping of them between him and this town, the hazard of himself, his estate, and all these countries, in case, being driven to fight, their army should have an overthrow; in the preservation whereof standeth the safety of the whole, and fortune had been disarmed by the greatness with which Charles had borne up against calamity, or else his supposed rashness was the highest military wisdom. Before Henry came up he had seized a position at an angle of the Meuse, where he could defend Namur, and could not be himself attacked, except at a disadvantage. The French approached only to retire, and, feeling themselves unable to force the Imperial lines, fell back towards the Boullonnois. Charles followed cautiously. An attack on Renty brought on an action in which the French claimed the victory; but the Emperor held his ground, and the town could not be taken; and Henry's army, from which such splendid results had been promised, fell back on the frontier and dispersed. The voices which had exclaimed against the Emperor's rashness were now as loud in his praise, and the disasters which he was accused of provoking, it was now found that he only had averted.* Neither the French nor the Impe-

CH. 31.

A.D. 1554.

July.

He baffles the invading army at Namur.

The French retire, and Charles has the honour of the campaign.

twenty other arguments. Yet was there no remedy, but forth he would, and commanded them that they should march sans plus repliquez. His headiness hath often put him to great hindrance, specially at Metz, and another time at Algiers. This enterprise is more dangerous than they both. God send him better fortune than multi ominantur.—Mason to Petre, Brussels, July 10: German MSS. Mary, bundle 16, State Paper Office.

* The Emperor, in these nine or ten days following of his enemy, hath showed a great courage, and no less skilfulness in the war; but much more notably showed the same when, with so small an army as he then had, he entered into Namur, a town of no strength, but commodious for the letting of his enemy's purpose, against the advice and persuasion of all his captains; which, if he had not done, out of doubt first Liège, and after, these countries had had such a foil as would long after have been remembered. By

CH. 31. rialists, in their long desperate struggle, can claim either approval or sympathy; the sufferings which they inflicted upon mankind were not the less real, the selfishness of their rivalry none the less reprehensible, because the disunion of the Catholic powers permitted the Reformation to establish itself. Yet, in this perplexed world, the deeds of men may be without excuse, while, nevertheless,
 in the men themselves there may be something
 to love, and something more to admire.

A. D. 1554.
 July.

his own wisdom and uncon- | trated.'—Mason to the Council,
 quered courage the enemy's | Aug. 13: German MSS. Mary,
 meaning that way was frus- | bundle 16, State Paper Office.

CHAPTER XXXII.

RECONCILIATION WITH ROME.

MARY had restored Catholic orthodoxy, and CH. 32.
her passion for Philip had been gratified. A.D. 1554.
To complete her work and her happiness, it remained to bring back her subjects to the bosom of the Catholic Church. Reginald Pole had by this time awoke from some part of his delusions. He had persuaded himself that he had but to appear with a pardon in his hand to be welcomed to his country with acclamation: he had ascertained Reginald Pole finds
England
less accessible than
he expected.
that the English people were very indifferent to the pardon, and that his own past treasons had created especial objections to himself. Even the queen herself had grown impatient with him.
He had fretted her with his importunities; his presence in Flanders had chafed the parliament,
and made her marriage more difficult; while he was supposed to share with the English nobles their jealousy of a foreign sovereign. So general was this last impression about him, that his nephew, Lord Stafford's son, who was one of the refugees, went to seek him in the expectation of countenance and sympathy: and, farther, he had been in correspondence with Gardiner, and was

CH. 32. believed to be at the bottom of the chancellor's religious indiscretions.* Thus his anxiety to be in England found nowhere any answering desire; and Renard, who dreaded his want of wisdom, never missed an opportunity of throwing difficulties in the way. In the spring of 1554 Pole had gone to Paris, where, in an atmosphere of so violent opposition to the marriage, he had not thought it necessary to speak in favour of it. The words which Dr. Wotton heard that he had used were reported to the Emperor; and, at last, Renard went so far as to suggest that the scheme of sending him to England had been set on foot at Rome by the French party in the Consistory, with a view of provoking insurrection and thwarting the Imperial policy.†

The Emperor desires the Pope to recall Pole, and appoint another legate.

The Emperor, taught by his old experiences of Pole, acquiesced in the views of his ambassador. If England was to be brought back to its allegiance, the negotiation would require a delicacy of handling for which the present legate was wholly unfit; and Charles wrote at last to the Pope to suggest that the commission should be transferred to a more competent person. Impatient language had been heard of late from the legate's lips, contrasting the vexations of the world with the charms of devotional retirement. To soften the

* RENARD.

† Que pourroit estre l'on auroit mis en avant au consistoire cette commission par affection particulière pour plustôt nuire, que servir aux consciences; attendu qu'ilz sont partialx

pour les princes Chrestiens, et souvent meslent les choses seculières et prophanes avec les conseils divins et ecclesiastiques.—Renard to Philip: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv.

harshness of the blow, the Emperor said that he understood Pole was himself weary of his office, and wished to escape into privacy. CH. 32.
A.D. 1554.

The respect of Julius for the legate's understanding was not much larger than the Emperor's; but he would not pronounce the recall without giving him an opportunity of explaining himself. Cardinal Morone wrote to him to inquire whether it was true that he had thought of retirement; he informed him of the Emperor's complaints; and, to place his resignation in the easiest light, (while pointing, perhaps, to the propriety of his offering it,) he hinted at Pole's personal unpopularity, and at the danger to which he would be exposed by going to England. It is suggested that Pole should resign.

But the legate could not relinquish the passionate desire of his life; while, as to the marriage, he was, after all, unjustly suspected. He requested Morone, in reply, to assure the Pope that, much as he loved retirement, he loved duty more. He appealed to the devotion of his life to the Church as an evidence of his zeal and sincerity; and, although he knew, he said, that God could direct events at his will and dispense with the service of men, yet, so long as he had strength to be of use, he would spend it in his Master's cause. In going to England he was venturing upon a stormy sea; he knew it well;* but, whatever befell him, his life was in God's hands. May 8.

* He begged Morone not to suppose him ignorant, 'quale sia il mare d'Inghilterra nel quale io ho da navigare et che fortuna et travagli potrei haver a sostinere per condurre la navi in porto.'— Pole to Morone: Epist. REG. POL. vol. iv. I have not seen

CH. 32.

A.D. 1554.

May 25.

Pole defends himself against the Emperor's suspicions.

A fortnight after he wrote again, replying more elaborately to the Emperor's charges. It was true, he admitted, that in his letters to the queen he had dwelt more upon her religious duties than upon her marriage: it was true that he had been backward in his demonstrations of pleasure, because he was a person of few words. But, so far from disapproving of that marriage, he looked upon it as the distinct work of God; and when his nephew had come with complaints to him, he had forbidden him his presence. He had spoken of the rule of a stranger in England as likely to be a lesson to the people; but he had meant only that, as their disasters had befallen them through their own king Henry, their deliverance would be wrought for them by one who was not their own. When the late parliament had broken up without consenting to the restoration of union, he had consoled the queen with assuring her that he saw in it the hand of Providence; the breach of a marriage between an English king and a Spanish princess had caused the wound which a renewed marriage of a Spanish king and an English queen was to heal.*

The defence was elaborate, and, on the whole,

Morone's first letter. The contents are to be gathered, however, from Pole's answer, and from a second letter of apology which Morone wrote two months later.

* Scrisi alla Regina non la volendo contristare condolermi di cio, che io interpretava et intendeva che questa tardita non venisse tanto da lei quanto delle Provi-

dentia di Dio, il qual habbia ordinato che si come per discordia matrimoniale d'un Re Inglesi et d'una Regina Hispana fu levata l'obedientia della chiesa de quel Regno cosi dalla concordia matrimoniale d'un Re Hispano et d'una Regina Inglese ella vi dovesse ritornare. — Pole to Morone: Epist. REG. POL. vol. iv.

may have been tolerably true. The Pope would not take the trouble to read it, or even to hear it read;* but the substance, as related to him by Morone, convinced him that the Emperor's accusations were exaggerated: to recal a legate at the instance of a secular sovereign was an undesirable precedent;† and the commission was allowed to stand. Julius wrote to Charles, assuring him that he was mistaken in the legate's feelings, leaving the Emperor at the same time, however, full power to keep him in Flanders or to send him to England at his own discretion.

CH. 32.

A.D. 1554.

May.

The Pope accepts the defence, and will not withdraw the commission.

Pole was to continue the instrument of the reconciliation; the conditions under which the reconciliation could take place were less easy to settle. The Popes, whose powers are unlimited where the exercise of them is convenient for the interests of the Holy See, have uniformly fallen back upon their inability where they have been called on to make sacrifices. The canons of the Church forbade, under any pretext, the alienation of ecclesiastical property; and until Julius could relinquish ex animo all intention of disturbing the lay holders of the English abbey lands, there was not a chance that the question of his supremacy would be so much as entertained by either Lords or Commons.

The Pope hesitates about the Church lands.

* E benché S. Sanctita non avesse pazienza secundo l'ordinario suo di leggere o di udir la lettera, nondimeno le dissi talmente la summa che mostro restare satisfattissima, e disse esser più che certa che quella non aveva dato causa ne all' Imperatore ne ad altri d'usar con lei termini così extravaganti.—Morone to Pole: BURNET's Collectanea.

† Ibid.

CH. 32.

A.D. 1554.

May.

Pole requests enlarged dispensing
powers,
which the Pope seems to concede.

The vague powers originally granted to the legate were not satisfactory; and Pole himself, who was too sincere a believer in the Roman doctrines to endure that worldly objections should stand in the way of the salvation of souls, wrote himself to the Holy See, entreating that his commission might be enlarged. The Pope in appearance consented. In a second brief, dated June 28th, he extended the legate's dispensing powers to real property as well as personal, and granted him general permission to determine any unforeseen difficulties which might arise.* Ormaneto, a confidential agent, carried the despatch to Flanders, and on Ormaneto's arrival, the legate, believing that his embarrassments were at last at an end, sent him on to the Bishop of Arras, to entreat that the perishing souls of the English people might now be remembered. The Pope had given way; the queen was happily married, and the reasons for his detention were at an end.†

Both Arras and the Emperor, however, thought more of Philip's security than of perishing souls. Arras, who understood the ways of the Vatican better than the legate, desired that, before any steps were taken, he might be favoured with a copy of these enlarged powers. He wished to know whether the question of the property was fairly relinquished to the secular powers in England, and whether the Church had finally washed its hands of it;‡ at all events, he must

The Bishop
of Arras requests to see the new commission,

* Powers granted by the Pope to Cardinal Pole: BURNET'S Collectanea.

† Charles V. to Renard: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv.

‡ Che gran differenza sarebbe

examine the brief. On inspection, the new com- mission was found to contain an enabling clause indeed, as extensive as words could make it; but the See of Rome reserved to itself the right of sanctioning the settlement after it had been made;* and the reservation had been purposely made, in order to leave the Pope free to act as he might please at a future time. Morone, writing to Pole a fortnight after the date of the brief, told him that his Holiness was still unable to come to a resolution;† while Ormaneto said openly to Arras, that, although the Pope would be as moderate as possible, yet his moderation must not be carried so far as to encourage the rest of Christendom in an evil example. Catholics must not be allowed to believe that they could appropriate Church property without offence, nor must the Holy See appear to be purchasing by concessions the submission of its rebellious subjects.‡

CH. 32.

A.D. 1554.

July.

And detects a weak point in it,

Which had been purposely left.

se fosse stata commessa la cosa o al S. Cardinale, o alli Serenissimi Principi.—Ormaneto to Priuli, July 31: BURNET'S Collectanea.

* Salvo tamen in his, in quibus propter rerum magnitudinem et gravitatem hæc sancta sedes merito tibi videretur consulenda, nostro et præfatæ sedis beneplacito et confirmatione.—Powers granted by the Pope to Cardinal Pole: Ibid.

† Nondimeno non si risolveva in tutto, com anco non si risolveva nella materia delli beni ecclesiastici, sopra la qual sua Sanctità ha parlato molte volte variamente.—Morone to Pole, July 13: Ibid.

‡ Il scauroit bien user de moderation quant aux biens occupez; mais que toutesfois il faudroit que ce fust de sorte que la reste de la Chrestienté n'en prînt malvais exemple; et signamment que aucuns Catholiques qui tiennent biens ecclesiastiques soubz leur main ne voulussent pretendre d'eulx approprier avec cest exemple; et que de vouloir laisser les biens à ceulx qui les occupent, il ne conviendrait pour ce qu'il sembleroit que ce seroit racheter, comme a deniers comptans l'autorité du siège apostolique en ce coustel-là. — The Emperor to Renard: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv. pp. 282, 283.

CH. 32.

A.D. 1554.

August 3.

The Emperor, therefore, cannot yet permit Pole to go to England,

This language was not even ambiguous; Pole was desired to wait till an answer could be received from England; and the Emperor wrote to Renard, desiring him to lay the circumstances before the queen and his son. He could believe, he said, that the legate himself meant well, but he had not the same confidence in those who were urging him forward, and the Pope had given no authority for haste or precipitate movements.*

August 6.
And a Council of State at Windsor
agrees in the same
opinion.

The Emperor's letter was laid before a Council of State at Windsor, on the 6th of August; and the council agreed with Charles that the legate's anxieties could not, for the present, be gratified. He was himself attainted, and parliament had shown no anxiety that the attainder should be removed. The re-imposition of the Pope's authority was a far more ticklish matter than the restoration of orthodoxy,† and the temper of the people was uncertain. The cardinal had, perhaps, intelligence with persons in England of a suspicious and dangerous kind, and the execution of his commission must depend on the pleasure of the next parliament. He was not to suppose that he might introduce changes in the constitution of the country by the authority of a Papal commission, or try experiments which might put in peril the sacred person of the prince.‡

* Nous sçavons que le dict Cardinal n'a commission de presser si chaudement en cette affaire — ains avons heu soubz main advertisement du nuncce propre de sa Sainteté que la resolution de la commission dudict Cardinal est que toutes choses se traictent

comm'il nous semblera pour le mieulx et qu'il tienne cecy pour règle.—Granv. Papers, vol. iv.

† Trop plus chastolleux que celui de la vraye religion.—Renard to the Emperor: Ibid. p. 287.

‡ Ibid.

Once more the cup of hope was dashed to the ground, and Reginald Pole was sent back to his monastery at Dhilinghen like a child unfit to be trusted with a dangerous plaything. In times of trial his pen was his refuge, and in an appeal to Philip he poured out his characteristic protest.

CH. 32.
A.D. 1554.
August.

‘For a whole year,’ he wrote, ‘I have been now knocking at the door of that kingdom, and no person will answer, no person will ask, Who is there? It is one who has endured twenty years of exile that the partner of your throne should not be excluded from her rights, and I come in the name of the vicar of the King of kings, the Shepherd of mankind. Peter knocks at your door; Peter himself. The door is open to all besides. Why is it closed to Peter? Why does not that nation make haste now to do Peter reverence? Why does it leave him escaped from Herod’s prison, knocking?’

Pole appeals to Philip.

‘Strange, too, that this is the house of Mary. Can it be Mary that is so slow to open? True, indeed, it is, that when Mary’s damsel heard the voice she opened not the door for joy; she ran and told Mary. But Mary came with those that were with her in the house; and though at first she doubted, yet, when Peter continued knocking, she opened the door; she took him in, she regarded not the danger, although Herod was yet alive, and was king.

‘Is it joy which now withholds Mary, or is it fear? She rejoices, that I know, but she also fears. Yet why should Mary fear now when Herod is dead? The providence of God permitted her to fear for awhile, because God desired that you, sire, who are Peter's beloved child, should share the great work with her. Do you, therefore, teach her now to cast her fears away. It is not I only who stand here—it is not only Peter—Christ is here—Christ waits with me till you will open and take him in. You who are King of England, are defender of Christ's faith; yet, while you have the ambassadors of all other princes at your court, you will not have Christ's ambassador; you have rejected your Christ.

CH. 32.
 A.D. 1554.
 August.

'Go on upon your way. Build on the foundation of worldly policy, and I tell you, in Christ's words, that the rain will fall, the floods will rise, the winds will blow, and beat upon that house, and it will fall, and great will be the fall thereof.'*

The pleading was powerful, yet it could bear no fruits—the door could not open till the Pope pronounced the magic words which held it closed. Neither Philip nor Mary was in a position to use violence or force the bars.

Ill blood begins between
 the Spaniards and
 the English.

After the ceremony at Winchester, the king and queen had gone first to Windsor, and thence the second week in August they went to Richmond. The entry into London was fixed for the 18th; after which, should it pass off without disturbance, the Spanish fleet might sail from Southampton Water. The prince himself had as yet met with no discourtesy; but disputes had broken out early between the English and

* Pole to Philip: Epist. REG. POL. vol. iv.

Spanish retinues, and petty taunts and insolences had passed among them.* The prince's luggage was plundered, and the property stolen could not be recovered nor the thieves detected. The servants of Alva and the other lords, who preceded their masters to London, were insulted in the streets, and women and children called after them that they need not have brought so many things, they would be soon gone again. The citizens refused to give them lodgings in their houses, and the friars who had accompanied Philip were advised to disguise themselves, so intense was the hatred against the religious orders.† The council soon provided for their ordinary comforts, but increase of acquaintance produced no improvement of feeling.

CH. 32.

A.D. 1554,
August.

The entry passed off tolerably. Gog and Magog stood as wardens on London Bridge, and there were the usual pageants in the city. Renard conceived that the impression produced by Philip had been rather favourable than otherwise; for the people had been taught to expect some monster but partially human, and they saw instead a well-dressed cavalier, who had learnt by this time to carry his hand to his bonnet. Yet, although there were no open signs of ill-feeling, the day did not end without a disagreeable incident. The conduit in Gracechurch-street

The king and queen enter London, and are received tolerably well.

* Avecques d'autres petits deportements de mocquerie qui croissent tous les jours d'ung cousté et d'autre.—Noailles to the King of France, August 1.

† NOAILLES; and compare Pole to Miranda, Oct. 6: Epist. REG. POL. vol. v.

CH. 32.

A.D. 1554.

August.

The nine Worthies
on the conduit in Grace-
church-
street.

had been newly decorated: 'the nine Worthies' had been painted round the winding turret, and among them were Henry VIII. and Edward. The first seven carried maces, swords, or poleaxes. Henry held in one hand a sceptre, in the other he was presenting a book to his son, on which was written Verbum Dei. As the train went by, the unwelcome figure caught the eye of Gardiner. The painter was summoned, called 'knave, traitor, heretic,' an enemy to the queen's Catholic proceedings. The offensive Bible was washed out, and a pair of gloves inserted in its place.*

Nor did the irritation of the people abate. The Spaniards, being without special occupation, were seen much in the streets; and a vague fear so magnified their numbers that four of them, it was thought, were to ~~meet~~ in Lon-

be met

September.

don for one Englishman.† The halls of the city companies were given up for their use; a fresh provocation to people who desired to be provoked. A Spanish friar was lodged at Lambeth, and it was said at once he was to be Archbishop of Canterbury; at the beginning of September twelve thousand Spanish troops were reported to be coming to 'fetch the crown.' Rumour and reality inflated each other. The peers, who had collected for the marriage, dispersed to their counties; and on the 10th of September, Pembroke, Shrewsbury, and Westmoreland were believed to have raised a standard of

The ill-feeling increases between the English
and the Spaniards.

* Chronicle of Queen Mary. Contemporary Narrative: MS. Harleian, 419.

† Chronicle of Queen Mary.

revolt at York. Frays were continually breaking out in the streets, and there was a scandalous brawl in the cloisters at Westminster. Brief entries in diaries and council books tell continually of Englishmen killed, and Spaniards hanged, hanged at Tyburn, or hanged more conspicuously at Charing Cross; and on the 12th, Noailles reported that the feeling in all classes, high and low, was as bad as possible.

CH. 32.

A.D. 1554.
September.

There was dread, too, that Philip was bent on drawing England into the war. The French ambassador had been invited to be present at the entry into London; but the invitation had been sent informally by a common messenger not more than half an hour before the royal party were to appear. The brief notice was intended as an affront, and only after some days Noailles appeared at court to offer his congratulations. When he came at last, he expressed his master's hope to Philip that the neutrality of England would continue to be observed. Philip answered with cold significance, that he would keep his promise and maintain the treaties, as long as by doing so he should consult the interests of the realm.*

Philip uses dangerous
words to Noailles.

Other menacing symptoms were also showing themselves: the claim for the pensions was spoken of as likely to be revived; the English ships in the Channel were making the neutrality one-sided, and protecting the Spanish and

* Tant et si longuement que ce seroit l'utilité et commodité de cedict Royaulme d'Angleterre.—Noailles to the King of France.

CH. 32.

A.D. 1554.
September.He proposes to leave England with
an English
escort, and involve
them in
the war.

Flemish traders; and Philip, already weary of his bride, was urging on Renard the propriety of his hastening, like an obedient son, to the assistance of his father. Under pretence of escort, he could take with him a few thousand English cavalry and men-at-arms, who could be used as a menace to France, and whose presence would show the attitude which England was about to assume. Sick, in these brief weeks, of maintaining the show of an affection which he did not feel, and sick of a country where his friends were insulted if he was treated respectfully himself, he was already panting for freedom, and eager to utilize the instruments which he had bought so dearly.*

Happily for the queen's peace of mind, Renard was not a man to encourage impatience. The factions in the council were again showing themselves; Elizabeth lay undisposed of at Woodstock; Pomfret, Belgium, even Hungary had been thought of as a destination for her, and had been laid aside one after the other, in dread of the people. If she was released, she would again be dangerous, and it was uncertain how long Lord Howard would endure her detention. A plan suggested by Lord Paget seemed, after all, to promise the best—to marry her to Philibert of Savoy, and thus make use of her as a second link to connect England with the House of Austria. But here the difficulty would be with the queen, who in that case would have to recognise her sister's rank and expectations.

* Renard to Charles V.: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv. p. 294.

The question should be settled before Philip left England, and he must have faced parliament too, and, if possible, have been crowned. If he went now, he would never come back; let him court the people, advised the keen Renard; let him play off the people against the Lords; there was ill blood between the rich and poor, let him use the opportunity.

CH. 32.

A.D. 1554.
September.
Renard
thinks that,
if Philip
goes, he will never return.

The state of public feeling did not improve when, at the end of September, Bonner commenced an inquisition into the conduct and opinions of the clergy of his diocese. In every parish he appointed a person or persons to examine whether the minister was or ever had been married; whether, if married and separated from his wife, he continued in secret to visit her; whether his sermons were orthodox; whether he was a 'brawler, scolder, hawker, hunter, fornicator, adulterer, drunkard, or blasphemer;' whether he duly exhorted his parishioners to come to mass and confession; whether he associated with heretics, or had been suspected of associating with them; his mind, his habits, his society, even the dress that he wore, were to be made matter of close scrutiny.

Bonner
sends out articles of inquiry
into the conduct of the London
clergy.

The points of inquiry were published in a series of articles which created an instantaneous ferment. Among the merchants they were attributed to the king, queen, and Gardiner, and were held to be the first step of a conspiracy against their liberties. A report was spread at the same time that the king meditated a seizure of the Tower; barriers were forthwith erected in

CH. 32. the great thoroughfares leading into the city, and no one was allowed to pass unchallenged.*

A.D. 1554.
September.
An agitation commences,
and Bonner
is obliged to suspend
his order :

The Bishop of London was called to account for having ventured so rash a step without permission of crown or council. He replied that he was but doing his duty; the council, had he communicated with them, would have interfered with him, and in the execution of his office he must be governed by his own conscience.† But the attitude of the city was too decided even for the stubborn Bonner, he gave way sullenly, and suspended the execution of his order.

But the opposition
can do nothing.

Worse clouds than these nevertheless had many times gathered over the court and dispersed again. It was easy to be discontented; but when the discontent would pass into action, there was nothing definite to be done; and between the leading statesmen there were such large differences of opinion, that they could not co-operate.‡ The court, as Renard saw, could accomplish everything which they desired with caution and prudence. The humours of the people might flame out on a sudden if too hastily irritated, but the opposite tendencies of parties effectually balanced each other; and even the Papal difficulty might be managed, and Pole might in time be brought over, if only there was no precipitation, and the Pope was compelled to be reasonable.

* Renard to the Bishop of Arras: Granvelle Papers, p. 330.

† Same to the Emperor: Ibid. p. 321.

‡ Entre les seigneurs et gens de la noblesse et de credit et administration, il y a telle partialité que l'un ne se fie de l'autre.—Ibid.

But prudence was the first and last essential; CH. 32.
the legate must be content to wait, and also Philip must wait. The winter was coming on, A.D. 1554.
and the court, Renard said, was giving balls; the October.
English and Spanish noblemen were learning The court
to talk with one another, and were beginning gives balls,
to dance with each other's wives and daughters. and the
The ill-feeling was gradually abating; and, in bad feeling fact, it was not to be believed that God Almighty is supposed would have brought about so considerable a mar- to abate.
riage without intending that good should come
of it.* The queen believed herself enceinte, and if her hopes were well founded, a thousand causes of restlessness would be disposed of; but Philip
must not be permitted to harass her with his impatience to begone. She had gathered something of his intentions, and was already pretending
more uncertainty than in her heart she felt, lest
he should make the assurance of her prospects an excuse for leaving her. In a remarkable passage, Renard urged the Emperor on no account to en- Renard,
courage him in a step so eminently injudicious, however,
from a problematic hope of embroiling England insists on and France. 'Let parliament meet,' he said, 'and caution and pass off quietly, and in February his Highness prudence.
may safely go. Irreparable injury may and will

* Les choses se vont accommoder à quoy sert la saison de l'hiver et ce que en la court l'on
y danse souvent; que les Espai-gnolz et Angloys commencent à converser les ungs avec les aultres
. et n'y a personne
qui puisse imaginer que Dieu ait
voulu ung si grand mariage et

de telz princes, pour en esperer
sinon ung grand bien publique
pour la Chrestienté, et pour res-tablir et asseurer les estatx de vostre majesté troublez par ses
ennemis.—Renard to the Emperor: Granvelle Papers, vol.
iv. p. 319.

CH. 32. follow, however, should he leave England before.

A. D. 1554.

October.

Philip must stay for the present with the queen. If he leaves her now, there will be a revolution.

Rash advisers must be kept at a distance.

Writs are issued for a parliament, with admonition to the electors.

Religion will be overthrown, the queen's person will be in danger, and parliament will not meet. A door will be opened for the practices of France; the country may throw itself in self-protection on the French alliance, and an undying hatred will be engendered between England and Spain. As things now are, prudence and moderation are more than ever necessary; and we must allow neither the king nor the queen to be led astray by unwise impatient advisers, who, for the advancement of their private opinions, or because they cannot have all the liberty which they desire, are ready to compromise the commonwealth.*

So matters stood at the beginning of October, when parliament was about to be summoned, and the great experiment to be tried whether England would consent to be re-united to Catholic Christendom. The writs went out on the 6th, and circulars accompanied them, addressed to those who would have the conduct of the elections, stating, that, whatever false reports might have been spread, no 'alteration was intended of any man's possessions.' At the same time the queen required the mayors of towns, the sheriffs, and other influential persons to admonish the voters to choose from among themselves 'such as, being eligible by order of the laws, were of a wise, grave, and Catholic sort; such as indeed meant the true honour of God and the prosperity of the commonwealth.†' These general directions were copied from a form which had been in use under Henry VII., and the citizens set the example of obedience in electing four members who were in every way satisfactory to the court.* In the country the decisive failure of Carew, Suffolk, and Crofts showed that the weight of public feeling was still in favour of the queen notwithstanding the Spanish marriage; and the re-action against the excesses of the Reformation had not yet reached its limits. On the accession of Mary, the restoration of the mass had appeared impossible, but it had been effected safely and completely almost by the spontaneous will of the people. In the spring the Pope's name could not be mentioned in Parliament; now, since the queen was bent upon it, and as she gave her word that property was not to be meddled with, even the Pope seemed no longer absolutely intolerable.

* Granville Papers, vol. iv. p. 320.

† Royal Circular; printed in BURNET's Collectanea.

CH. 32.

A.D. 1554.
October.

The country is conservative, and the re-action has not reached its limits.

The reports of the elections were everywhere favourable. In the Upper House, except on very critical points, which would unite the small body of the lay peers, the court was certain of a majority, being supported of course by the bishops—and the question of Pole's coming over, therefore, was once more seriously considered. The Pope had been given to understand that, however inconsistent with his dignity he might consider it

The elections are favourable to the court,

* Les lettres de la convocation du parlement sont esté pour-jectées sur la vieille forme dont l'on usoit au temps du Roy Henry septième pour avoir en icelluy gens de bien Catholiques: et à propos et selon ce ceulx de

Londre en publique assemblée ont choisiz quatre personnaiges que l'on tient estre fort saiges et modestes.—Renard to the Emperor: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv. p. 324.

CH. 32. to appear to purchase English submission by setting aside the canons of the Church, he must consent to the English terms, or there was no hope whatever that his supremacy would be recognised. If in accepting these terms he would agree to a humiliating reconciliation, only those who objected on doctrinal grounds to the Papal religion were inclined to persist in refusing a return of his friendship. The dream of an independent orthodox Anglicanism which had once found favour with Gardiner was fading away. The indifferent and the orthodox alike desired to put an end to spiritual anarchy; and the excommunication, though lying lightly on the people, and despised even by the Catholic powers, had furnished, and might furnish, a pretext for inconvenient combinations. Singularity of position, where there was no especial cause for it, was always to be avoided.

A.D. 1554.
October.
And the conservative party
in the country will endure a reconciliation
with Rome.

These influences would have been insufficient to have brought the English of themselves to seek for a reunion. They were enough to induce them to accept it with indifference when offered them on their own conditions, or to affect for a time an outward appearance of acquiescence.

Philip, therefore, consulted Renard, and Charles invited Pole to Brussels. Renard, to whom politics were all-important, and religion useful in its place, but inconvenient when pushed into prominence, adhered to his old opinion. He advised the 'king to write privately to the Pope, telling him that he had already so many embarrassments on his hands that he could not afford

Renard
considers that it had better not be attempted.

to increase them;’ ‘the changes already made were insincere, and the legatine authority was odious, not only in England, but throughout Europe;’ ‘the queen, on her accession, had promised a general toleration,* and it was useless to provoke irritation when not absolutely necessary.’

Yet even Renard spoke less positively than before.

‘If the Pope would make no more reservations on the land question—if he would volunteer a general absolution, and submit to conditions, while he exacted none—if he would sanction every ecclesiastical act which had been done during the schism, the marriages and baptisms, the ordinations of the clergy, and the new creations of episcopal sees—above all, if he would make no demand for money under any pretence, the venture might, perhaps, be made.’ But, continued Renard, his ‘Holiness, even then, must be cautious in his words; he must dwell as lightly as possible on his authority, as lightly as possible on his claims to be obeyed: in offering absolution, he must talk merely of piety and love, of the open arms of the Church, of the example of the Saviour, and such other generalities.’† Finally, Renard still thought the legate had better remain abroad. The reconciliation, if it could be effected

CH. 32.

A.D. 1554.
Oct. 15.

If the Pope will be very submissive, he thinks it may, perhaps, be managed ;

But Pole had better stay abroad.

* Le mandement et declaration que vostre Majesté a faict publier sur le point de la religion, laissant la liberté à ung chacun pour tenir quelle religion l'on voudra.—Renard to Philip and Mary: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv. p. 327.

† Et que sa Sainteté le fonde in pietate Christianâ et ecclesiasticâ quia nunquam Ecclesia claudit gremium, semper indulget exemplo Salvatoris, et Evangelium semper consolatur, semper remittit, et sur plusieurs aultres fondemens generaulx.—Ibid. p. 326.

CH. 32. at all, could be managed better without his irritating presence.

A.D. 1554.

Oct. 15.

Pole has an interview with the Emperor.

Pole himself had found the Emperor more gracious. Charles professed the greatest anxiety that the Papal authority should be restored. He doubted only if the difficulties could be surmounted. Pole replied that the obstacles were chiefly two—one respecting doctrine, on which no concession could be made at all; the other respecting the lands, on which his Holiness would make every concession. He would ask for nothing, he would exact nothing; he would abandon every shadow of a claim.

The Emperor's opinion of the English.

If this was the case, the Emperor said, all would go well. Nevertheless, there was the reservation in the brief, and the Pope, however generous he might wish to be, was uncertain of his power. The doctrine was of no consequence. People in England believed one doctrine as little as another;* but they hated Rome, they hated the religious orders, they hated cardinals; and, as to the lands, could the Church relinquish them?† Pole might believe that she could; but the world would be more suspicious, or less easy to convince. • At all events, the dispensing powers must be clogged with no reservations; nor could he come to any decision till he heard again from England.

The legate was almost hopeless; yet his time

* Perciocche quanto alla Dottrina disse che poco se ne curavano questo tali non credendo ne all' una ne all' altra via.—Pole to the Pope, October 13: BURNET'S Collectanea.

† Disse anche che essendo stati questi beni dedicati a Dio non era da concedere così ognuna cosa a quelli che le tenevano.—Ibid.

of triumph—such triumph as it was—had nearly arrived. The queen's supposed pregnancy had increased her influence; and, constant herself in the midst of general indecision, she was able to carry her point. She would not mortify the legate, who had suffered for his constancy to the cause of her mother, with listening to Renard's personal objections; and when the character of the approaching House of Commons had been ascertained, she gained the consent of the council, a week before the beginning of the session, to send commissioners to Brussels to see Pole and inspect his faculties. With a conclusive understanding on the central question, they might tell him that the hope of his life might be realized, and that he might return to his country. But the conditions were explicit. He must bring adequate powers with him, or his coming would be worse than fruitless. If those which he already possessed were insufficient, he must send them to Rome to be enlarged;* and

CH. 32.

A.D. 1554.
October.

November.
An embassy goes from England to Pole to tell him that he may return.

* The greatest and only means to procure the agreement of the noblemen and others of our council was our promise that the Pope's Holiness would, at our suit, dispense with all possessors of any lands or goods of monasteries, colleges, or other ecclesiastical houses, to hold and enjoy their said lands and goods without any trouble or scruple; without which promise it had been impossible to have had their consent, and shall be utterly impossible to have any fruit and good concord ensue. For which purpose you shall earnestly pray our said cousin to use all possible diligence, and say that if he have not already, he may so receive authority from the See Apostolic to dispense in this matter as the same, being now in good towardness, may so in this parliament take the desired effect; whereof we see no likelihood except it may be therewithal provided for this matter of the lands and goods of the Church. — Instructions to Paget and Hastings, November 5: TYTLER, vol. ii. p. 446.

CH. 32. although the court would receive him as legate de latere, he had better enter the country only as a cardinal and ambassador, till he could judge of the state of things for himself.* On these terms the commissioners might conduct him to the queen's presence.

A. D. 1554.
November.

The bearers of this communication were Lord Paget and Sir Edward Hastings, accompanied, it is curious to observe, by Sir William Cecil.†

* TYTLER, vol. ii. p. 446.

† Cecil had taken no formal part in Mary's government, but his handwriting can be traced in many papers of state, and in the Irish department he seems to have given his assistance throughout the reign. In religion Cecil, like Paget, was a latitudinarian. His conformity under Mary has been commented upon bitterly; but there is no occasion to be surprised at his conduct — no occasion, when one thinks seriously of his position, to blame his conduct. There were many things in the Catholic creed of which Cecil disapproved; and when his opportunity came, he gave his effectual assistance for the abolition of them; but as long as that creed was the law of the land, as a citizen he paid the law the respect of external obedience.

At present religion is no longer under the control of law, and is left to the conscience. To profess openly, therefore, a faith which we do not believe is justly condemned as hypocrisy. But wherever public law extends, personal responsibility is limited. A minority is not permitted to resist the decisions of the legislature on subjects in which the legislature is entitled to interfere; and in the sixteenth century opinion was as entirely under rule and prescription as actions or things. Men may do their best to improve the laws which they consider unjust. They are not, under ordinary circumstances, to disobey them so long as they exist. However wide the basis of a government, questions, nevertheless, will ever rise between the individual and the state — questions, for instance, of peace or war, in which the conscience has as much a voice as any other subject; where, nevertheless, individuals, if they are in the minority, must sacrifice their own opinions; they must contribute their war taxes without resistance; if they are soldiers, they must take part as combatants for a cause of which they are convinced of the injustice. That is to say, they must do things which it would be impious and wicked in them to do, were they as free in their obligations as citizens as they are now free in the religion which they will profess.

This was the view in which

They presented themselves to the Emperor, who, after the report which they brought with them, made no more difficulty. The enlarged powers had been sent for three weeks before; but there was no occasion to wait for their arrival. They might be expected in ten days or a fortnight, and could follow the legate to England.*

CH. 32.

A.D. 1554.
November.

The effect on Pole of the commissioners' arrival 'there needed not,' as they said themselves, 'many words to declare.'† His eager temperament, for ever excited either with wild hopes or equally wild despondency, was now

NOV. 11.

the mass was regarded by statesmen like Cecil, and generally by many men of plain straightforward understanding, who believed transubstantiation as little as he. In Protestantism, as a constructive theology, they had as little interest as in Popery; when the alternative lay between the two, they saw no reason to sacrifice themselves for either.

It was the view of common sense. It was not the view of a saint. To Latimer, also, technical theology was indifferent—indifferent in proportion to his piety. But he hated lies—legalized or unlegalized—he could not tolerate them, and he died sooner than seem to tolerate them. The counsels of perfection, however, lead to conduct neither possible, nor, perhaps, desirable for ordinary men.

* Charles was particular in his inquiries of Mary's prospect of a family. He spoke to Sir John Mason about it, who was then the resident ambassador:—

'Sir, quoth I,' so Mason reported the conversation, 'I have from herself nothing to say, for she will not confess the matter till it be proved to her face; but by others I understand, to my great joy, that her garments wax very strait. I never doubted, quoth he, of the matter, but that God, that for her had wrought so many miracles, would make the same perfect to the assisting of nature to his good and most desired work: and I warrant it shall be, quoth he, a man-child. Be it man, quoth I, or be it woman, welcome it shall be; for by that we shall be at the least come to some certainty to whom God shall appoint by succession the government of our estates.'—Mason to the King and Queen, November 9: TYTLER, vol. ii. p. 455.

† Paget and Hastings to the Queen: Ibid. p. 459.

СН. 32. about to be fooled to the top of its bent. On the Pope's behalf, he promised everything; for himself, he would come as ambassador, he would come as a private person, come in any fashion
 that might do good, so only that he might come.

A.D. 1554.
November.

Parliament
meets, and repeals Pole's attainer.

Little time was lost in preparation. Parliament met on the 12th of November. The opening speech was read, as usual, by Gardiner, and was well received, although it announced that further measures would be taken for the establishment of religion, and the meaning of these words was known to every one. The first measure brought forward was the repeal of Pole's attainder. It passed easily without a dissentient voice, and no obstacle of any kind remained to delay his appearance. Only the cautious Renard suggested that Courtenay should be sent out of the country as soon as possible, for fear the legate should take a fancy to him; and the Prince of Savoy had been invited over to see whether anything could be done towards arranging the marriage with Elizabeth. Elizabeth, indeed, had protested that she had no intention of marrying;
 nevertheless, Renard said, she would be disposed of, as the Emperor had advised,* could the queen
 be induced to consent.

Courtenay
is to be sent away, and Elizabeth,
if possible,
to be married and got rid of.

Nov. 13.
The legate
sets out for
England.

England was ready therefore, and the happy
 legate set out from Brussels like a lover flying to his mistress. His emotions are reflected in

* Neantmoins il sera necessaire achever avec elle selon l'avis de vostre Majesté.—Renard to the Emperor: Granvelle Papers,
 vol. iv.

the journal of an Italian friend who attended him. The journey commenced on Tuesday, the 13th; the retinues of Paget and Hastings, with the cardinal's household, making in all a hundred and twenty horse. The route was by Ghent, Bruges, and Dunkirk. On the 19th the party reached Gravelines, where, on the stream which formed the boundary of the Pale, they were received in state by Lord Wentworth, the Governor of Calais. In the eyes of his enthusiastic admirers the apostle of the Church moved in an atmosphere of marvel. The Calais bells, which rang as they entered the town, were of preternatural sweetness. The salutes fired by the ships in the harbour were 'wonderful.' The cardinal's lodging was a palace, and, as an august omen, the watchword of the garrison for the night was 'God long lost is found.*' The morning brought a miracle. A westerly gale had blown for many days. All night long it had howled through the narrow streets; the waves had lashed against the piers, and the fishermen foretold a week of storms. At day-break the wind went down, the clouds broke, a light air from the eastward levelled the sea, and filled the sails of the vessel which was to bear them to England. At noon the party went on board, and their passage was a fresh surprise. They crossed in three hours and a half, and the distance, as it pictured itself to imagina-

СН. 32.

A.D. 1554.
November.

He arrives
at Calais.

Tuesday,
Nov. 20.
A favourable change
of wind
carries him
rapidly
across the Channel.

* Dio gran tempo perduto e hora ritrovato.—Descriptio Reductionis Angliæ: Epist. REG. POL. vol. v.

CH. 32.

A.D. 1554.

Nov. 20.

He sleeps
at Dover, and commences his

Nov. 21.

Progress towards London.The legate
at Canterbury.

tion, was forty miles.* At Dover the legate slept. The next day Lord Montague came with the Bishop of Ely, bringing letters of congratulation from the queen and Philip, and an intimation that he was anxiously looked for. He was again on horseback after breakfast; and as the news of his arrival spread, respect or curiosity rapidly swelled his train. The Earl of Huntingdon, who had married his sister, sent his son Lord Hastings, with his tenants and servants, as an escort. But there was no danger. Whatever might be the feelings of the people towards the papal legate, they gave to Reginald Pole the welcome due to an English nobleman.

The November evening had closed in when the cavalcade entered Canterbury. The streets were thronged, and the legate made his way through the crowd, amidst cries of 'God save your Grace.' At the door of the house—probably the archbishop's palace—where he was to pass the night, Harpsfeld, the archdeacon, was standing to receive him, with a number of the clergy; and with the glare of torches lighting up the scene, Harpsfeld commenced an oration as the legate alighted, so beautiful, so affecting, says Pole's Italian friend, that all the hearers were moved to tears. The archdeacon spoke of the mercies of God, and the marvellous workings of his providence. He dwelt upon the history of the

* Imbarcatosi adunque sua
S. R. ad un hora di giorno, passo
a Doure nell' Isola in tre hore et mezza che fu camino di quaranta

miglia fatto con extraordinaria
prestezza. — Epist. REG. POL.
vol. v.

cardinal, whom God had preserved through a thousand dangers for the salvation of his country; and, firing up at last in a blaze of enthusiasm, he exclaimed, 'Thou art Pole, and thou art our Polar star, to light us to the kingdom of the heavens. Sky, rivers, earth, these disfigured walls—all things—long for thee. While thou wert absent from us all things were sad, all things were in the power of the adversary. At thy coming all things are smiling, all glad, all tranquil.*' The legate listened so far, and then checked the flood of the adoring eloquence. 'I heard you with pleasure,' he said, 'while you were praising God. My own praises I do not desire to hear. Give the glory to Him.'

CH. 32.
A.D. 1554.
Nov. 21.

From Canterbury, Richard Pate, who, as titular Bishop of Worcester, had sate at the Council of Trent, was sent forward to the queen with an answer to her letter, and a request for further directions. The legate himself went on leisurely to Rochester, where he was entertained by Lord Cobham, at Cowling Castle. So far he had observed the instructions brought to him by Paget, and had travelled as an ordinary ecclesiastic, without distinctive splendour. On the night of the 23rd, however, Pate returned from

The legate goes to Rochester.

* 'Tu es Polus, qui aperis nobis Polum regni cœlorum. Aer, flumina, terra, parietes ipsi, omnia denique te desiderant. Quamdiu abfuisti omnia fuerunt tristia et adversa. In adventu tuo, omnia rident, omnia læta, omnia tranquilla.' I have endeavoured to preserve the play on the word Polus, altering the meaning as little as the necessities of translation would allow. It has been suggested to me that the word 'parietes' implies properly internal walls, and the allusion was to the defacement of the cathedral.

CH. 32. the court with a message that the legatine insignia might be displayed. A fleet of barges was in waiting at Gravesend, where Pole appeared early on the 24th; and, as a further augury of good fortune, he found there Lord Shrewsbury, with his early friend the Bishop of Durham, who had come to meet him with the repeal of his attainder, to which the queen had given her assent in parliament the day before.

A.D. 1554.
Saturday,
Nov. 24.
The royal barges are
in waiting at Graves-
end.

The Italians find a miracle in the tides
of the Thames.

The legate
arrives at Whitehall,

Where he is received by Philip and
the queen.

To the fluttered hearts of the priestly company the coincidence of the repeal, the informality of an act of parliament receiving the royal assent before the close of a session, were further causes of admiration. They embarked; and the Italians, who had never seen a tidal river, discovered, miracle of miracles, that they were ascending from the sea, and yet the stream was with them. The distance to London was soon accomplished. They passed under the Bridge at one o'clock on the top of the tide, the legate's barge distinguished splendidly by the silver cross upon the bow. In a few minutes more they were at the palace-stairs at Whitehall, where a pier was built on arches out into the river, and on the pier stood the Bishop of Winchester, with the Lords of the Council.

The king and queen were at dinner, the arrival not being expected till the afternoon. Philip rose instantly from the table, hurried out, and caught the legate in his arms. The queen followed to the head of the grand staircase; and when Pole reached her, she threw herself on his breast, and kissed him, crying that his coming gave her as much joy as the possession of her kingdom. The cardinal, in corresponding ecstasy, exclaimed, in the words of the angel to the Virgin, 'Ave Maria gratia plena, Dominus tecum, benedicta tu in mulieribus.'* The first rapturous moments over, the king, queen, and legate proceeded along the gallery, Philip and Pole supporting Mary on either side, and the legate expatiating on the mysteries of Providence.

CH. 32.

A.D. 1554.

Nov. 24.

The legate's salutation.

'High thanks, indeed,' he exclaimed, 'your Majesty owes to the favour of the Almighty, seeing that, while he permits you to bring your godly desires to perfection, he has united at this moment in your favour the two mightiest powers upon earth—the Majesty of the Emperor represented in the king your husband, and the Pope's Holiness represented in myself.' The queen, as she walked, replied 'in words of sweet humility,' pouring out gentle excuses for past delays. The legate, still speaking with ecstatic metaphor, answered that it was the will of God; God waited till the time was mature, till he could say to her Highness, 'Blessed be the fruit of thy womb.'†

The favour of Heaven to the queen.

In the saloon they remained standing together

* 'Cardinalis cum reginam salutaret, nec ulla humana verba occurrerent tali muliere digna, Sanctis Scripturarum verbis abuti non verebatur, sed in primo congressu iisdem quibus matrem Dei salutavit Angelus Reginam Polus alloquitur, Ave Maria,' &c.—Salkyns to Bullinger: Epistolæ Tigurinæ, p. 169.

† 'Il Signor Legato rispose che Dio havea voluto, che fusse tardato a tempo piu maturo, perche egli haveasse potuto dire a sua Altezza come diceva Benedictus fructus ventris tui.'—Descriptio Reductionis Angliæ.

CH. 32. for another quarter of an hour. When the cardinal took his leave for the day, the king, in spite of remonstrance, re-attended him to the gate. Alva and the Bishop of Winchester were in waiting to conduct him to Lambeth Palace, which had been assigned him for a residence. The see of Canterbury was to follow as soon as Cranmer could be despatched.

A.D. 1554.
Nov. 24.
The legate is conducted to Lambeth by Alva and Gardiner.

The queen declares herself with child. Te Deums in the London churches.

Arrived at Lambeth, he was left to repose after his fatigues and excitements. He had scarcely retired to his apartments when he was disturbed again by a message from the queen. Lord Montague had hurried over with the news that the angelic salutation had been already answered. 'The babe had leapt in her womb.'* Not a moment was lost in communicating the miracle to the world. Letters of council were drawn out for Te Deums to be sung in every church in London. The next day being Sunday, every pulpit was made to ring with the testimony of Heaven to the truth.

The last complete dispensing powers arrive from Rome.

On Monday the 26th the cardinal went to the palace for an audience, and again there was more matter for congratulation. As he was approaching the king's cabinet, Philip met him with a packet of despatches. The last courier sent to Rome had returned with unheard-of expedition, and the briefs and commissions in which the Pope relinquished formally his last reservations, had arrived. Never, exclaimed the Catholic enthusiast, in a fervour of devout astonishment—never since the days of the apostles had so many tokens CH. 32.

* Descriptio Reductionis Angliæ.

of divine approbation been showered upon a human enterprise. The moment of its consum- A.D. 1554.
Nov. 24.
mation had arrived.* Since the thing was to be,
no one wished for delay. Three days sufficed for the few necessary preparations, and the two The Lords
and Commons assemble at Whitehall.
Houses of Parliament were invited to be present
unofficially at Whitehall on the afternoon of Wednesday the 28th. In the morning there was a procession in the city and a Te Deum at St.
Paul's. After dinner, the Great Chamber was thrown open, and the Lords and Commons crowded in as they could find room. Philip and Mary entered, and took their seats under the cloth of state; while Pole had a chair assigned him on their right hand, beyond the edge of the canopy. The queen was splendidly dressed, and it was observed that she threw out her person, to make her supposed condition as conspicuous as possible.† When all were in their places, the Chancellor rose.

‘My Lords of the Upper House,’ he said, ‘and The legate is introduced by
Gardiner.
you my masters of the Nether House, here is present the Right Reverend Father in God the Lord Cardinal Pole, come from the Apostolic See of Rome
as ambassador to the King’s and Queen’s Majesties,
upon one of the weightiest causes that ever hap-

* The queen’s assurances respecting her child were so emphatic, that even Noailles believed her. Profane persons were still incredulous. On Sunday the 25th, the day after the Te Deums, Noailles says, ‘S’est
trouvé ung placard attaché à la

porte de son palais y estant ces
mots en substance: ‘serons nous si bestes oh nobles Angloys, que
croyre notre reyne estre enceinte
si non d’un marmot ou d’un
dogue.’

† Contemporary Diary: MS.
Harleian, iv. 19.

CH. 32. pened in this realm, and which pertaineth to the
 A.D. 1554. glory of God and your universal benefit; the which Nov. 28. embassy it is their Majesties' pleasure that it be signified unto you all by his own mouth, trusting that you will accept it in as benevolent and thankful wise as their Highnesses have done, and that you will give an attent and inclinable ear to him.'

The legate
 rises, and speaks.

The legate then left his chair and came forward. He was now fifty-four years old, and he had passed but little of his life in England; yet his features had not wholly lost their English character. He had the arched eyebrow, and the delicately-cut cheek, and prominent eye of the beautiful Plantagenet face; a long, brown, curling beard flowed down upon his chest, which it almost covered; the mouth was weak and slightly open, the lips were full and pouting, the expression difficult to read. In a low voice, audible only to those who were near him, he spoke as follows:—
 'My Lords all, and you that are the Commons of this present parliament assembled, as the cause of my repair hither hath been wisely and gravely declared by my Lord Chancellor, so, before I enter into the particulars of my commission, I have to say somewhat touching myself, and to give most humble and hearty thanks to the King's and Queen's Majesties, and after them to you all—which of a man exiled and banished from this commonwealth, have restored me to be a member of the same, and of a man having no place either here or elsewhere within this realm, have admitted me to a place where to speak and where to be heard. This I protest unto you all, that though I was

He has been ever
 well inclined to England,
 although unjustly
 exiled.

exiled my native country, without just cause, as God knoweth, yet the ingratitude could not pull from me the affection and desire that I had to your profit and to do you good.

CH. 32.

A.D. 1554.
Nov. 28.

‘But, leaving the rehearsal hereof, and coming more near to the matter of my commission, I signify unto you all, that my principal travail is for the restitution of this noble realm to the antient nobility, and to declare unto you that the See Apostolic, from whence I come, hath a special respect to this realm above all others; and not without cause, seeing that God himself, as it were, by providence hath given to this realm prerogative of nobility above others, which, to make plain unto you, it is to be considered that this island first of all islands received the light of Christ’s religion.’

England,
beyond all
countries,
has been favoured by Providence,

Going into history for a proof of this singular proposition, the legate said that the Britons had been converted by the See Apostolic, ‘not one by one, as in other countries, as clocks increase the hours by distinction of times,’ ‘but altogether, at once, as it were, in a moment.’ The Saxons had brought back heathenism, but had again been soon converted; and the Popes had continued to heap benefit upon benefit on the favoured people, even making them a present of Ireland, ‘which pertained to the See of Rome.’ The country had prospered, and the people had been happy down to the time of the late schism; from that unhappy day they had been overwhelmed with calamities.

And in consequence favoured of the Holy See.

The legate dwelt in some detail on the

CH. 32. misfortunes of the preceding years. He then
 A.D. 1554.
 Nov. 28. went on: 'But, when all light of true religion seemed extinct, the churches defaced, the altars overthrown, the ministers corrupted, even like as in a lamp, the light being covered yet it is not quenched—even so in a few remained the confession of Christ's faith, namely, in the breast of the Queen's Excellency, of whom to speak without adulation, the saying of the prophet may be verified, ecce quasi derelicta: and see how miraculously God of his goodness preserved her Highness contrary to the expectation of men, that when numbers conspired against her, and policies were devised to disinherit her, and armed power prepared to destroy her, yet she, being a virgin, helpless, naked, and unarmed, prevailed, and had the victory of tyrants. For all these practices and devices, here you see her Grace established in her estate, your lawful queen and governess, born among you, whom God hath appointed to govern you for the restitution of true religion and the extirpation of all errors and sects. And to confirm her Grace more strongly in this enterprise, lo how the providence of God hath joined her in marriage with a prince of like religion, who, being a king of great might, armour, and force, yet useth towards you neither armour nor force, but seeketh you by way of love and amity; and as it was a singular favour of God to conjoin them in marriage, so it is not to be doubted but he shall send them issue for the comfort and surety of this commonwealth.

God has continued his favour in preserving the queen from schism,

And from treason.

He has married her to a mighty prince, who rules them by love, although he might crush them by force.

'Of all princes in Europe the Emperor hath travailed most in the cause of religion, yet, CH. 32.

 haply by some secret judgment of God, he hath not obtained the end. I can well compare him A.D. 1554.
 to David, which, though he were a man elect of Nov. 28.
 God, yet for that he was contaminate with blood and wars, he could not build the temple of Jerusalem, but left the finishing thereof to Solomon, who was Rex pacificus. So it may be thought that the appeasing of controversies of religion in Christendom is not appointed to this Emperor, but rather to his son; who shall perform the building that his father had begun,
 which church cannot be builded unless universally in all realms we adhere to one head, and do acknowledge him to be the vicar of God, and to have power from above—for all power is of God,
 according to the saying, Non est potestas nisi in Deo.

Philip
is the Solomon who shall restore the faith of Christendom.

‘All power being of God, he hath derived that power into two parts here on earth, which is into the powers imperial and ecclesiastical;
 and these two powers, as they be several and distinct, so have they two several effects and operations. Secular princes be ministers of God to execute vengeance upon transgressors and evil
 liver, and to preserve the well-doers and innocents from injury and violence; and this power is represented in these two most excellent persons,
 the King’s and Queen’s Majesties here present.
 The other power is of ministration, which is the power of keys and orders in the ecclesiastical
 state; which is by the authority of God’s word
 and example of the apostles, and of all holy fathers from Christ hitherto attributed and given

The power
of the sword and
the power
of the keys.

CH. 32. to the Apostolic See of Rome by special prerogative: from which See I am here deputed legate and ambassador, having full and ample commission from thence, and have the keys committed to my hands. I confess to you that I have the keys—not as mine own keys, but as the keys of Him that sent me; and yet cannot I open, not for want of power in me to give, but for certain impediments in you to receive, which must be taken away before my commission can take effect. This I protest before you, my commission is not of prejudice to any person. I am come not to destroy, but to build; I come to reconcile, not to condemn; I am not come to compel, but to call again; I am not come to call anything in question already done; but my commission is of grace and clemency to such as will receive it—for, touching all matters that be past, they shall be as things cast into the sea of forgetfulness.

But the country must render itself capable of entry, before the doors can be unlocked.

‘ But the mean whereby you shall receive this benefit is to revoke and repeal those laws and statutes which be impediments, blocks, and bars to the execution of my commission. For, like as I myself had neither place nor voice to speak here amongst you, but was in all respects a banished man, till such time as ye had repealed those laws that lay in my way, even so cannot you receive the benefit and grace offered from the Apostolic See until the abrogation of such laws whereby you had disjoined and dissevered yourselves from the unity of Christ’s Church.

‘ It remaineth, therefore, that you, like true

Christians and provident men, for the weal of your souls and bodies, ponder what is to be done
in this so weighty a cause, and so to frame your acts and proceedings as they may first tend to the glory of God, and, next, to the conservation of your commonwealth, surety, and quietness.'

CH. 32.
A.D. 1554.
Nov. 28.

The speech was listened to by such as could hear it with profound attention, and several persons were observed to clasp their hands again and again, and raise them convulsively before their faces. When the legate sat down, Gardiner gave him the thanks of parliament, and suggested that the two Houses should be left to themselves to consider what they would do. Pole withdrew with the king and queen, and Gardiner exclaimed: A prophet has 'the Lord raised up among us from among our brethren, and he shall save us.' For the benefit of those who had been at the further end of the hall, he then recapitulated the substance of what had been said. He added a few words of exhortation, and the meeting adjourned.

The next day, Thursday, Lords and Commons sate as usual at Westminster. The repeal of all the acts which directly, or by implication, were aimed at the Papacy, would occupy, it was found, a considerable time; but the impatient legate was ready to accept a promise as a pledge of performance, and the general question was therefore put severally in both Houses whether the country should return to obedience to the Apostolic See. Among the peers no difficulty was made at all. Among the Commons, in a house of 360, there

Nov. 29.
Lords and Commons meet, to consider whether they will be reconciled.

CH. 32. were two dissentients—one, whose name is not
 A.D. 1554. mentioned, gave a silent negative vote; the other,
 Nov. 29. Sir Ralph Bagenall, stood up alone to protest. Twenty years, he said, 'that great and worthy prince, King Henry,' laboured to expel the Pope from England. He for one had 'sworn to King Henry's laws,' and 'he would keep his oath.'*

They agree
 to make their submission
 with dangerous unanimity.

But Bagenall was listened to with smiles. The resolution passed, the very ease and unanimity betraying the hollow ground on which it rested; and, again, devout Catholics beheld the evident work of supernatural agency. Lords and Commons had received separately the same proposition; they had discussed it, voted on it, and come to a conclusion, each with closed doors, and the messengers of the two Houses encountered each other on their way to communicate their several decisions.† The chancellor arranged with Pole the forms which should be observed, and it was agreed that the Houses should present a joint petition to the king and queen, acknowledging their past misconduct, engaging to undo the anti-papal legislation, and entreating their Majesties, as undefiled with the offences which tainted the body of the nation, to intercede

* The writer of the Italian 'Description' says that Bagenall gave way the next day. The contemporary narrative among the Harleian MSS. says that he persisted, and refused to kneel at the absolution.

† 'Mentre la casa alta mandava a far sapere la sua conclusione alla casa bassa, la casa

bassa mandava anch' ella per fare intendere il medesimo alla casa alta, sicchè i messi s'incontrarono per via; segno evidentissimo che lo Spirito di Dio lavorava in amendue i luoghi in un tempo i di una medesima conformita.'—Descriptio Reductionis Angliæ.

for the removal of the interdict. A committee of CH. 32.
Lords and Commons sate to consider the words
in which the supplication should be expressed, A.D. 1554.
and all preparations were completed by the even- Nov. 29.
ing.

And now St. Andrew's Day was come; a day, Nov. 30.
as was then hoped, which would be remembered
with awe and gratitude through all ages of English history. Being the festival of the institution of the Order of the Golden Fleece, high High mass mass was sung in the morning in Westminster is said at Abbey; Philip, Alva, and Ruy Gomez attended in Westminster Abbey.
their robes, with six hundred Spanish cavaliers.
The Knights of the Garter were present in gorgeous costume, and nave and transept were thronged with the blended chivalry of England and Castile. It was two o'clock before the service was concluded. Philip returned to the palace to dinner, and the brief November afternoon was drawing in when the parliament re- Parliament assembled at the palace. At the upper end of meets again
the great hall a square platform had now been at White-raised several steps above the floor; on which hall.
three chairs were placed as before; two under a canopy of cloth of gold, for the king and queen;
a third on the right, removed a little distance
from them, for the legate. Below the platform, benches were placed longitudinally towards either
wall. The bishops sate on the side of the legate, the lay peers opposite them on the left. The Commons sat on rows of cross benches in front,
and beyond them were the miscellaneous crowd
of spectators, sitting or standing as they could

CH. 32. find room. The cardinal, who had passed the morning at Lambeth, was conducted across the water in a state barge by Lord Arundel and six other peers. The king received him at the gate, and, leaving his suite in the care of the Duke of Alva, who was instructed to find them places, he accompanied Philip into the room adjoining the hall, where Mary, whose situation was supposed to prevent her from unnecessary exertion, was waiting for them. The royal procession was formed. Arundel and the Lords passed in to their places. The king and queen, with Pole in his legate's robes, ascended the steps of the platform, and took their seats.

A.D. 1554.
Nov. 30.
Pole is brought from Lambeth, and the king and queen take their seats.

When the stir which had been caused by their entrance was over, Gardiner mounted a tribune; and in the now fast-waning light he bowed to the king and queen, and declared the resolution at which the Houses had arrived. Then turning to the Lords and Commons, he asked if they continued in the same mind. Four hundred voices answered, 'We do.' 'Will you then,' he said, 'that I proceed in your names to supplicate for our absolution, that we may be received again into the body of the Holy Catholic Church, under the Pope, the supreme head thereof?' Again the voices assented. The Chancellor drew a scroll from under his robe, ascended the platform, and presented it unfolded on his knee to the queen. The queen looked through it, gave it to Philip, who looked through it also, and returned it. The Chancellor then rose and read aloud as follows:—

Gardiner presents the petition of the Lords and Commons for the pardon of England.

‘We, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons of the present Parliament assembled, representing the whole body of the realm of England, and dominions of the same, in our own names particularly, and also of the said body universally, in this our supplication directed to your Majesties—with most humble suit that it may by your gracious intercession and means be exhibited to the Most Reverend Father in God the Lord Cardinal Pole, Legate, sent specially hither from our Most Holy Father ‘Pope Julius the Third and the See Apostolic of Rome—do declare ourselves very sorry and repentant for the schism and disobedience committed in this realm and dominions of the same, against the said See Apostolic, either by making, agreeing, or executing any laws, ordinances, or commandments against the supremacy of the said See, or otherwise doing or speaking what might impugn the same; offering ourselves, and promising by this our supplication that, for a token and knowledge of our said repentance, we be, and shall be always, ready, under and with the authority of your Majesties, to do that which shall be in us for the abrogation and repealing of the said laws and ordinances in this present parliament, as well for ourselves as for the whole body whom we represent. Whereupon we most humbly beseech your Majesties, as persons undefiled in the offences of this body towards the Holy See—which nevertheless God by his providence hath made subject to your Majesties—so to set forth this, our most humble suit, that we

CH. 32.

A.D. 1554.
Nov. 30.

CH. 32. may obtain from the See Apostolic, by the said
 A.D. 1554. Most Reverend Father, as well particularly as Nov. 30. universally, absolution, release, and discharge
 from all danger of such censures and sentences
 as by the laws of the Church we be fallen in;
 and that we may, as children repentant, be received into the bosom and unity of Christ's Church; so as this noble realm, with all the members thereof, may, in unity and perfect obedience to the See Apostolic and Pope for the time being, serve God and your Majesties, to the furtherance and advancement of his honour and glory.*

The legate's commission is
 read.

Having completed the reading, the chancellor again presented the petition. The king and queen went through the forms of intercession, and a secretary read aloud, first, the legate's original commission, and, next, the all-important extended form of it.

Pole's share of the ceremony was now to begin.

He first spoke a few words from his seat: 'Much indeed,' he said, 'the English nation had to thank the Almighty for recalling them to his fold. Once again God had given a token of his special favour to the realm; for as this nation, in the time of the Primitive Church, was the first to be called out of the darkness of heathenism, so now they were the first to whom God had given

* FOXE, vol. vi. p. 571. The petition was in Latin; but, as I have nowhere seen the original, I have not ventured to interfere with Foxe's translation. Foxe, who could translate very idiomatically when he pleased, perhaps relieved his indignation on the present occasion by translating as awkwardly as possible.

grace to repent of their schism; and if their repentance was sincere, how would the angels, who rejoice at the conversion of a single sinner, triumph at the recovery of a great and noble people.'

CH. 32.

A.D. 1554.
Nov. 30.

He moved to rise; Mary and Philip, seeing that the crisis was approaching, fell on their knees, and the assembly dropped at their example; while, in dead silence, across the dimly-lighted hall came the low, awful words of the absolution.

Pole rises,
and, the assembly
kneeling,
pronounces
the absolu-
tion.

'Our Lord Jesus Christ, which with his most precious blood hath redeemed and washed us from all our sins and iniquities, that he might purchase unto himself a glorious spouse without spot or wrinkle, whom the Father hath appointed head over all his Church,—he by his mercy absolves you, and we, by apostolic authority given unto us by the Most Holy Lord Pope Julius the Third, his vicegerent on earth, do absolve and deliver you, and every of you, with this whole realm and the dominions thereof, from all heresy and schism, and from all and every judgment, censure, and pain for that cause incurred; and we do restore you again into the unity of our Mother the Holy Church, in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.'

Amidst the hushed breathing every tone was audible, and at the pauses were heard the smothered sobs of the queen. 'Amen, amen,' rose in answer from many voices. Some were really affected; some were caught for the moment with a contagion which it was hard to resist;

CH. 32. some threw themselves weeping in each other's arms. King, queen, and parliament, rising from their knees, went immediately—the legate leading—into the chapel of the palace, where the choir, with the rolling organ, sang Te Deum; and Pole closed the scene with a benediction from the altar.

A.D. 1554.
Nov. 30.
Te Deum is sung in the chapel, and
the legate
pronounces
a benediction.

The ecstasy
of some persons.

‘Blessed day for England,’ cries the Italian describer, in a rapture of devotion. ‘The people exclaim in ecstasies, we are reconciled to God, we are brought back to God: the king beholds his realm, so lately torn by divisions, at the mercy of the first enemy who would seize upon it, secured on a foundation which never can be shaken: and who can express the joy—who can tell the exultation of the queen? She has shown herself the handmaid of the Lord, and all generations shall call her blessed: she has given her kingdom to God as a thank-offering for those great mercies which He has bestowed upon her.’*

The legate
writes to
the Pope;

And the legate; but the legate has described his emotions in his own inimitable manner. Pole went back to Lambeth, not to rest, but to pour out his soul to the Holy Father.

In his last letter he said ‘he had told his Holiness that he had hoped that England would be recovered to the fold at last; yet he had then some fears remaining, so far estranged were the minds of the people from the Holy See, lest at the last moment some compromise might ruin all.’

But the godly forwardness of the king and queen had overcome every difficulty; and on that evening, the day of St. Andrew—of Andrew CH. 32.

* Descriptio Reductionis Angliæ: Epist. REG. POL. vol. v.

 who first brought his brother Peter to Christ—the realm of England had been brought back to its A.D. 1554.
 obedience to Peter's See, and through Peter to Nov. 30.
 Christ. The great act had been accomplished, Tells him accomplished by the virtue and the labour of that he has the inestimable sovereigns with whom God had completed blessed the world. the reconciliation,

'And oh,' he said, 'how many things, how great things, may the Church our mother, the bride of Christ, promise herself from these her children?
 Oh piety! oh antient faith! Whoever looks on them will repeat the words of the prophet of the Church's early offspring; 'This is the seed which the Lord hath blessed.' How earnestly, how lovingly, did your Holiness favour their marriage;
 a marriage formed after the very pattern of that of our Most High King, who, being Heir of the And draws world, was sent down by his Father from his certain royal throne, to be at once the Spouse and the compari-Son of the Virgin Mary, and be made the Com- sons.
 forter and the Saviour of mankind: and, in like manner, the greatest of all the princes upon earth, the heir of his father's kingdom, departed from his own broad and happy realms, that he might come hither into this land of trouble, he,
 too, to be spouse and son of this virgin; for,
 indeed, though spouse he be, he so bears himself
 towards her as if he were her son, to aid in the reconciliation of this people to Christ and the Church.*

* This amazing comparison must be given in the original (for one cannot forget what Philip words of the legate:
 had been, was, and was to be) 'Quam sancte sanctitas vestra

CH. 32. 'When your Holiness first chose me as your
 A.D. 1554. legate, the queen was rising up as a rod of in-
 Nov. 30. cense out of trees of myrrh, and as frankincense
 out of the desert. And how does she now shine out in loveliness? What a savour does she give forth unto her people. Yea, even as the prophet saith of the mother of Christ, 'before she was in labour she brought forth, before she was delivered she hath borne a man-child.' Who ever yet hath seen it, who has heard of the similitude of it? Shall the earth bring forth in a day, or shall a nation of men be born together? but Mary has brought forth the nation of England
 before the time of that delivery for which we all are hoping?'

The bishops
 and clergy
 make de-monstrations.

Unable to exhaust itself in words, the Catholic enthusiasm flowed over in processions, in sermons, masses, and Te Deums. Gardiner at Paul's Cross, on the Sunday succeeding, confessed
 his sins in having borne a part in bringing about the schism. Pole rode through the city between the king and queen, with his legate's cross before him, blessing the people. When the news reached Rome Julius first embraced the mes-

omni auctoritate studioque, huic
 matrimonio favit; quod sane vide-
 tur præ se ferre magnam sum-
 mi illius regis similitudinem,
 qui mundi hæres a regalibus
 sedibus a patre demissus fuit, ut
 esset virginis sponsus et filius,
 et hæc ratione universum genus
 humanum consolaretur ac servaret. Sic enim hic rex maxi-mus omnium qui in terris sunt hæres, patriis relictis regnis et

illis quidem amplissimis ac feli-cissimis in hoc turbulentum
 regnum se contulit, hujusque
 virginis sponsus et filius est fac-
 tus; ita enim erga illam se gerit tanquam filius esset cum sit sponsus, ut quod jam plane perfecit sequestrem se atque adjutorem ad reconciliandos Christo
 et Ecclesie hos populos præberet.
 —Pole to the Pope: Epist.
REG. POL. vol. v.

senger, then flung himself on his knees, and said a Paternoster. The guns at St. Angelo roared in triumph. There were jubilees and masses of the Holy Ghost, and bonfires, and illuminations, and pardons, and indulgences. In the exuberance of his hopes, the Pope sent a nuntio to urge that, in the presence of this great mercy, peace should be made with France, where the king was devoted to the Church; the Catholic powers would then have the command of Europe, and the heretics could be destroyed.* One thing only seemed forgotten, that the transaction was a bargain. The Papal pardon had been thrust upon criminals, whose hearts were so culpably indifferent that it was necessary to bribe them to accept it; and the conditions of the compromise, even yet, were far from concluded.

CH. 32.

A.D. 1554.
December.
Nov. 30.

The Pope orders rejoicings at Rome, and desires a crusade.

The sanction given to the secularization of Church property was a cruel disappointment to the clergy, who cared little for Rome, but cared much for wealth and power. Supported by a party in the House of Commons who had not shared in the plunder, and who envied those who had been more fortunate,† the ecclesiastical faction began to agitate for a reconsideration of the question. Their friends in parliament said that the dispensation was unnecessary. Every man's conscience ought to be his guide whether to keep his lands or surrender them. The queen was known to hold the same opinion, and eager

But the stream does not run as smoothly as he desired,

* PALLAVICINO.

† Renard to the Emperor: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv.

CH. 32. preachers began to sound the note of restitution.*
 Growing bolder, the Lower House of Convocation presented the bishops immediately after with a series of remarkable requests. The Pope, in the terms on which he was reinstated, was but an ornamental unreality; and the practical English clergy desired substantial restorations which their eyes could see and their hands could handle.

A.D. 1554.
 December.
 The clergy of England petition for the restoration of their powers and privileges,

They demanded, therefore, first, that if a statute was brought into parliament for the assurance of the Church estates to the present possessors, nothing should be allowed to pass prejudicial to their claims 'on lands, tene-ments, pensions, or tythe rents, which had appertained to bishops, or other ecclesiastical persons.'

For the repeal of the Statute of Mortmain,

They demanded, secondly, the repeal of the Statute of Mortmain, and afterwards the abolition of lay impropriations, the punishment of heretics, the destruction of all the English Prayer-books

* 'It was this morning told me by one of the Emperor's council, who misliked much the matter, that a preacher of ours whose name he rehearsed, beateth the pulpit jollily in England for a restitution of abbey lands. It is a strange thing in a well-ordered commonwealth that a subject should be so hardy to cry unto the people openly such learning, whereby your winter work may in the summer be attempted with some storm. These unbridled preachings were so much misliked in the ill-governed time as men trusted in this good governance it should have been amended; and so may it be when it shall please my Lords of the Council as diligently to consider it, as it is more than necessary to be looked unto. The party methinketh might well be put to silence, if he were asked how, being a monk, and having professed and vowed solemnly wilful poverty, he can with conscience keep a deanery and three or four benefices.'—Mason to Petre: MS. Germany, bundle 16, Mary, State Paper Office. It is not clear who the offender was. Perhaps it was Weston, Dean of Westminster and Prolocutor of Convocation.

and Bibles, the revival of the Act De Hæretico Comburendo, the re-establishment of the episcopal courts, the restoration of the legislative functions of Convocation, and the exemption of the clergy from the authority of secular magistrates.

CH. 32.
A.D. 1554.
December.

Finally, they required that the Church should be restored absolutely to its ancient rights, immunities, and privileges; that no Premunire should issue against a bishop until he had first received notice and warning; that the judges should define 'a special doctrine of Premunire,' and that the Statutes of Provisors should not be wrested from their meaning.*

And for limitations
and explanations of the Statutes of Provisors.

The petition expressed the views of Gardiner, and was probably drawn under his direction. Had the alienated property been no more than the estates of the suppressed abbeys, the secular clergy would have acquiesced without difficulty in the existing disposition of it. But the benefices impropriated to the abbeys which had been sold or granted with the lands, they looked on as their own; the cathedral chapters and the bishops' sees, which had suffered from the second locust flight under Edward, formed part of the local Anglican Church: and Gardiner and his brother prelates declared that, if the Pope chose to set aside the canons, and permit the robbing of the religious orders, he might do as he pleased; but that he had neither right nor powers to sanction the spoliation of the working bishops and clergy. Thus the feast of reconciliation having been duly

The impropriation of benefices causes disputes and complaints.

* Demands of the Lower House of Convocation, December, 1554: printed in WILKINS'S Concilia.

CH. 32. celebrated, both Houses of Parliament became again the theatre of fierce and fiery conflict.

A.D. 1554.
December.

The lawyers
and the clergy are
of different opinions.

There were wide varieties of opinion. The lawyers went beyond the clergy in limiting the powers of the Pope; the lawyers also said the Pope had no rights over the temporalities of bishops or abbots, deans, or rectors; but they did not any more admit the rights of the clergy. The English clergy, regular and secular, they said, had held their estates from immemorial time under the English crown, and it was not for any spiritual authority, domestic or foreign, to decide whether an English king and an English parliament might interfere to alter the disposition of those estates.

The composition of the House of Lords throws the power into the hands of the crown.

On other questions the clerical party were in the ascendant; they had a decided majority in the House of Commons; in the Upper House there was a compact body of twenty bishops; and Gardiner held the proxies of Lord Rich, Lord Oxford, Lord Westmoreland, and Lord Abergavenny. The queen had created four new peers; three of whom, Lord North, Lord Chandos, and Lord Williams were bigoted Catholics; the fourth, Lord Howard, was absent with the fleet, and was unrepresented. Lord North held the proxy of Lord Worcester; and the Marquis of Winchester, Lord Montague, and Lord Stourton acted generally with the chancellor. Lord Russell was keeping out of the way, being suspected of heresy; Wentworth was at Calais; Grey was at Guisnes; and the proxies of the two last noblemen, which in the late parliament were held by Arundel and Paget, were, for some unknown reason, now held by no one. Thus, in a house of seventy-three members only, reduced to sixty-nine by the absence of Howard, Russell, Wentworth, and Grey, Gardiner had thirty-one votes whom he might count upon as certain; he knew his power, and at once made fatal use of it.

CH. 32.
A.D. 1554.
December.

For two parliaments the liberal party had prevented him from recovering the power of persecution. He did not attempt to pass the Inquisitorial Act on which he was defeated in the last session. But the Act to revive the Lollard Statutes was carried through the House of Commons in the second week in December; on the 15th it was brought up to the Lords; and although those who had before fought the battle of humanity, struggled again bravely in the same cause, this time their numbers were too small; they failed, and the lives of the Protestants were in their enemies' hands.* Simultaneously Gardiner obtained for the bishops' courts their long-coveted privilege of arbitrary arrest and discretionary punishment, and the clergy obtained, as they desired, the restoration of their legislative powers. The property question alone disintegrated the phalanx of orthodoxy, and left an opening for the principles of liberty to assert themselves. The faithful and the faithless

The persecuting statutes are revived by Gardiner, and after a struggle are passed.

The bishops' courts are restored, and Convocation recovers its powers.

* 'La chambre haulte y faict difficulté pour ce que l'auctorité et jurisdiction des evesques est autorizée et renouvelée, et que la peine semble trop grieve. Mais l'on tient qu'ilz s'accorderont par la pluralité.'—Renard to the Emperor, December 21: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv.

СН. 32. among the laity were alike participators in Church
 A.D. 1554. plunder, and were alike nervously sensitive when December. the current of the re-action ran in the direction of a demand for restitution.

Here, therefore, Paget and his friends chose their ground to maintain the fight.

It has been seen that Pole especially dreaded the appearance of any sort of composition between the country and the Papacy. The submission had, in fact, been purchased, but the purchase ought to be disguised. As soon, therefore, as the parliament set themselves to the fulfilment of their promise to undo the Acts by which England had separated itself from Rome, the legate required a simple statute of repeal. The Pope had granted a dispensation; it was enough, and it should be accepted gratefully: but the penitence of sinners ought not to be mixed with questions of worldly interest; the returning prodigal, when asking pardon at his father's feet, had made no conditions; the English nation must not disfigure their obedience by alluding, in the terms of it, to the Pope's benevolence to them.

But differences continue on the question of the Church lands;

The holders of the property, on the other hand, thinking more of the reality than the form, were determined that the Act of Repeal should contain, as nearly as possible, a true statement of their case. They had made conditions, and those conditions had been reluctantly complied with; and, to prevent future errors, the nature of the compact ought to be explained with the utmost distinctness. They had replaced the bishops in authority, and the bishops might be made use of at some future time, indirectly or directly, to disturb the settlement. A fresh Pontiff might refuse to recognise the concessions of his predecessors. The Papal supremacy, the secularization of the Church property, and the authority of the episcopal courts should, therefore, be interwoven inextricably to stand or fall together; and as the lawyers denied the authority of the Holy See to pronounce upon the matter at all, the legal opinion might be embodied also as a further security.

CH. 32.

A.D. 1554.
December.
And on this point the laity make good their own opinions.

After a week of violent discussion, the lay interest in the House of Lords found itself the strongest. Pole exclaimed that, if the submission and the dispensation were tied together, it was a simoniacal compact; the Pope's Holiness was bought and sold for a price, he said, and he would sooner go back to Rome, and leave his work unfinished, than consent to an act so derogatory to the Holy See. But the protest was vain; if the legate was so anxious, his anxiety was an additional reason why the opposition should persevere; if he chose to go, his departure could be endured.*

Pole threatens to go back to Rome if he cannot have his way.

So keen was the debate that there was not so much as a Christmas recess. Christmas-day was kept as a holyday. On the 26th the

* 'Le parlement faict instance que, en statut de la dicte obedience la dicte dispense soit inserée, ce que le dict cardinal ne veult admettre, à ce que ne semble la dicte obedience avoir este rachetée; et est passée si avant la dicte difficulté que le

dict cardinal a déclaré qu'il retourneroit plutôt à Rome et délaisseroit la chose imparfaite que consentir à chose contre l'auctorité dudict S. Siege, et de si grande prejudice.' — Renard to the Emperor, December: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv.

CH. 32. struggle began again, and, fortunately, clouds had risen between the House of Commons and the court. Finding more difficulty than he expected in embroiling England with France, Philip, to feel the temper of the people, induced one of the peers to carry a note to the Lower House to request an opinion whether it was not the duty of a son to assist his father. An answer was instantly returned that the question had been already disposed of by the late parliament in the marriage treaty, and the further discussion of it was unnecessary.* Secretary Bourne, at the instigation of Gardiner, proposed to revive the claims on the pensions; but he met with no better reception. And the court made a further blunder. Mary had become so accustomed to success, that she assured herself she could obtain all that she desired. The object of the court was to secure the regency for Philip, with full sovereign powers, should she die leaving a child; should she die childless, to make him her successor. The first step would be Philip's coronation, which had been long talked of, and which the House of Commons was now desired to sanction. The

A.D. 1554.
December.
The House
of Commons is uncom-
plaisant to Philip.

Philip cannot be crowned.

* 'Ces jours passez, il y eust ung personnaige de la haulte chambre, auquel il sembla pour ne perdre temps debvoir porter, (comme il fist) une billette à la basse par laquelle il mettait en advant s'il n'estoit pas raisonnable que le filz secourust le père, voulant dire de ce roy a l'Empereur. Ce qui fut si bien recueilly du tiers estat, si promptment et avecques grande raison respondu, comme par le dernier parlement et le traité de mariaige d'entre ce roy et royne cela avoit esté et estoit tellement considéré, qu'il n'estoit plus besoign mettre telles choses en advant pour les faire entrer à la guerre.'—Noailles to the King of France: Ambassades, vol. iv. p. 76.

House of Commons returned a unanimous re- CH. 32.
fusal.*

The effects of these cross influences on the Papal statute, though they cannot be traced in detail, must have been not inconsiderable. At length, on the 4th of January, after passing backwards and forwards for a fortnight between the two Houses, the Great Bill, as it was called, emerged, finished, in the form of a petition to the crown:—

A.D. 1554.
December.

The bill of reconciliation is passed.

‘Whereas,’ so runs the preamble,† ‘since the 20th year of King Henry VIII., of famous memory, much false and erroneous doctrine hath been taught, preached, and written, partly by divers natural-born subjects of this realm, and partly being brought in hither from sundry foreign countries, hath been sown and spread abroad within the same—by reason whereof as well the spirituality as the temporality of your Highness’s realm and dominions have swerved from the obedience of the See Apostolic, and declined from the unity of Christ’s Church, and so have continued until such time as—your Majesty being first raised up by God, and set in the seat royal over us, and then by his divine and gracious Providence knit in marriage with the most noble and virtuous prince the King

* ‘Je vous puis dire Sire que toutes ces choses ont passé bien loing de l’esperance qu’il avoit, puisqu’il s’attendoit de se faire couronner, comme depuis six jours il en avoit particulièrement faict rechercher ceulx de la basse chambre dudict parlement qui luy ont tous d’une voix rejezté.’

—Noailles to the King of France:
Ambassades, vol. iv. p. 137.

† 1 and 2 Philip and Mary,
cap. 8.

CH. 32. our Sovereign Lord your husband—the Pope’s Holiness and the See Apostolic sent hither unto your Majesties, as unto persons undefiled, and by God’s goodness preserved from the common infection aforesaid, and to the whole realm, the Most Reverend Father in God the Lord Cardinal Pole, Legate de Latere, to call us again into the right way, from which we have all this long while wandered and strayed; and we, after sundry and long plagues and calamities, seeing, by the goodness of God, our own errours, have knowledge the same unto the said Most Reverend Father, and by him have been and are (the rather at the contemplation of your Majesties) received and embraced into the unity of Christ’s Church, upon our humble submission, and promise made for a declaration of our repentance to repeal and abrogate such acts and statutes as had been made in Parliament since the said 20th year of the said King Henry VIII., against the supremacy of the See Apostolic, as in our submission exhibited to the said Most Reverend Father in God, by your Majesties appeareth—it may like your Majesty, for the accomplishment of our promise, that all such laws be repealed. That is to say:—

All acts, which make directly or indirectly against the authority of the Pope, are repealed.

‘ The Act against obtaining Dispensations from Rome for Pluralities and non-Residence.*

‘ The Act that no Person shall be cited out of the Diocese where he or she dwelleth.†

‘ The Act against Appeals to the See of Rome.‡

* 21 Henry VIII. cap. 13.

† 23 Henry VIII. cap. 9.

‡ 24 Henry VIII. cap. 12.

‘The Act against the Payment of Annates and First-fruits to the See of Rome.*

CH. 32.

‘The Act for the Submission of the Clergy.†

A.D. 1555.
January.

‘The Act for the Election and Consecration of Bishops.‡

‘The Act against Exactions from the See of Rome.§

‘The Act of the Royal Supremacy.||

‘The Act for the Consecration of Suffragan Bishops.¶

‘The Act for the Reform of the Canon Law.

‘The Act against the Authority of the Pope.††

‘The Act for the Release of those who had obtained Dispensations from Rome.‡‡

‘The Act authorizing the King to appoint Bishops by Letters Patent.§§

‘The Act of Precontracts and Degrees of Consanguinity.|||

‘The Act for the King’s Style.¶¶

‘The Act permitting the Marriage of Doctors of Civil Law.’

In the repeal of these statutes the entire ecclesiastical legislation of Henry VIII. was swept away; and, so far as a majority in a single parliament could affect them, the work was done absolutely and with clean completeness.

* 23 Henry VIII. cap. 20.
The act was repealed, but the annates were not restored.

† 25 Henry VIII. cap. 19.

‡ 25 Henry VIII. cap. 20.

§ 25 Henry VIII. cap. 21.

|| 26 Henry VIII. cap. 1.

¶ 26 Henry VIII. cap. 14.

 27 Henry VIII. cap. 15.

†† 28 Henry VIII. cap. 10.

‡‡ 28 Henry VIII. cap. 16.

§§ 31 Henry VIII. cap. 9.

||| 33 Henry VIII. cap. 38.

¶¶ 35 Henry VIII. cap. 3.

 37 Henry VIII. cap. 17.

CH. 32. But there remained two other acts collaterally and accidentally affecting the See of Rome; for A.D. 1555. the repeal of which the court was no less anxious January. than for the repeal of the Act of Supremacy,
 where the parliament were not so complaisant.

But parliament will
 not permit
 the succession to be altered.

Throughout the whole reaction under Mary there was one point on which the laity never wavered. Attempts such as that which has been just mentioned were made incessantly, directly or indirectly, to alter the succession and cut off Elizabeth. They were like the fretful and profitless chafings of waves upon a rock. The two acts on which Elizabeth's claims were rested* touched, in one or other of their clauses, the Papal prerogative, and were included in the list to be condemned. But, of these acts, 'so much only' as affected the See of Rome was repealed. The rest was studiously declared to continue in force.

Yet, with this reservation, the parliament had gone far in their concessions, and it remained for them to secure their equivalent.

The clergy
 are compelled to relinquish
 all claims
 on alienated church
 property.

They reinstated the bishops, but, in giving back a power which had been so much abused, they took care to protect—not, alas! the innocent lives which were about to be sacrificed—but their own interests. The bishops and clergy of the Province of Canterbury having been made to state their case and their claims, in a petition to the crown, they were then compelled formally to relinquish those claims; and the petition and the relinquishment

* 28 Henry VIII. cap. 7; 35 Henry VIII. cap. 1.

were embodied in the act as the condition of the restoration of the authority of the Church courts.* In continuation, the Lords and Commons desired that, for the removal 'of all occasion of contention, suspicion, and trouble, both outwardly and inwardly, in men's consciences,' the Pope's Holiness, as represented by the legate, 'by dispensation, toleration, or permission, as the case required,' would recognise all such foundations of colleges, hospitals, cathedrals, churches, schools, or bishoprics as had been established during the schism, would confirm the validity of all ecclesiastical acts which had been performed during the same period; and, finally, would consent that all property, of whatever kind, taken from the Church, should remain to its present possessors—'so as all persons having sufficient conveyance of the said lands, goods, and chattels by the common laws, or acts, or statutes of the realm, might, without scruple of conscience, enjoy them without impeachment or trouble, by pretence of any

CH. 32.

A.D. 1555.
January.

* 'Albeit, by the laws of the Church, the bishops and clergy were the defenders and protectors of all ecclesiastical rights, and would therefore in nature be bound to use their best endeavours for the recovery of the lands and goods lost to the Church during the late schism, they, nevertheless, perceiving the tenures of those lands and goods were now complicated beyond power of extrication, and that the attempt to recover them might promote disaffection in the realm, and cause the overthrow of the present happy settlement of religion, preferring public peace to private commodity, and the salvation of souls to worldly possessions, did consent that the present disposition of those lands and goods should remain undisturbed. They besought their Majesties to intercede with the legate for his consent, and, for themselves, they requested, in return, that the lawful jurisdiction of the Church might be restored.'—1 and 2 Philip and Mary, cap. 8, sec. 31.

CH. 32. general council, canon, or ecclesiastical law, and clear from all dangers of the censures of the Church.' The petitions, both of clergy and parliament, the act went on to say, had been considered by the cardinal; and the cardinal had acquiesced. He had undertaken, in the Pope's name, that the possessors of either lands or goods should never be molested either then or in time to come, in virtue of any Papal decree, or canon, or council; that if any attempt should be made by any bishop or other ecclesiastic to employ the spiritual weapons of the Church to extort restitution, such act or acts were declared vain and of none effect. The dispensation was pronounced, nor could the legate's protests avail to prevent it from appearing in the act. He was permitted, only in consideration of the sacrifice, to interweave amidst the legal technicalities some portion of his own feeling. The impious detainers of holy things, while permitted to maintain their iniquity, were reminded of the fate of Belshazzar, and were urged to restore the patines, chalices, and ornaments of the altars. The impropiators of benefices were implored, in the mercy of Christ, to remember the souls of the people, and provide for the decent performance of the services of the churches.*

A.D. 1555.
January.

The legate grants a dispensation to the holders of the Church property, and the dispensation is embodied in the act.

* 'Et licet omnes res mobiles ecclesiarum indistincte iis qui eas tenent relaxaverimus, eos tamen admonitos esse volumus ut ante oculos habentes divini iudicii severitatem contra Balthazarem Regem Babylonis, qui vasa sacra non a se sed a patre a templo ablata in profanos usus convertit, ea propriis ecclesiis si extant vel aliis restituant, hortantes etiam et per viscera misericordiae Jesu Christi obtestantes eos omnes quos hæc res tangit, ut salutis

Here the act might have been expected to end. The nature of the transaction between the parliament and the Pope had been made sufficiently clear. Yet, had nothing more been said, the surrender of their claims by the clergy would have implied that they had parted with something which they might have legitimately required. Under the inspiration of the lawyers, therefore, a series of clauses were superadded, explaining that, notwithstanding the dispensation, 'The title of all lands, possessions, and hereditaments in their Majesties' realms and dominions was grounded in the laws, statutes, and customs of the same, and by their high jurisdiction, authority royal, and crown imperial, and in their courts only, might be impleaded, ordered, tried, and judged, and none otherwise:" and, therefore, 'whosoever, by any process obtained out of any ecclesiastical court within the realm or without, or by pretence of any spiritual jurisdiction or otherwise, contrary to the laws of the realm, should inquiet or molest any person or persons, or body politic, for any of the said lands or things above specified, should incur the danger of Premunire, and should suffer and incur the forfeitures and pains contained in the same.'*

CH. 32.

A.D. 1555.
January.

Nevertheless, by accepting the dispensation, the parliament does not mean that the Pope or clergy have any jurisdiction over land in England ;

And if any one molests the present owners, he shall be liable to a Premunire.

sue non omnino immemores hoc saltem efficiant, ut ex bonis ecclesiasticis maxime iis quæ ratione personatum et vicariatuum populi ministrorum sustentationi fuerint specialiter destinata, seu aliis cathedralibus et aliis quæ nunc extant inferioribus ecclesiis

curam animarum exercentibus, ita provideatur, ut eorum pastores commodè et honestè juxta eorum qualitatem et statum sustentari possint, et curam animarum laudabiliter exercere.'—1 and 2 Philip and Mary, cap. 8, sec. 31.

* Ibid.

CH. 32.

A.D. 1555.
January.Laymen
entitled to tithes may recover
them as before the passing of the act.

Vainly the clergy had entreated for a limitation or removal of Premunire. That spectre remained unexorcised in all its shadowy terror; and while it survived, the penitence of England went no deeper than the lips, however fine the words and eloquent the phrases in which it was expressed. As some compensation, the Mortmain Act was suspended for twenty years. Yet, as if it were in reply to Pole's appeal, a mischievous provision closed the act, that, notwithstanding anything contained in it, laymen entitled to tithes might recover them with the same readiness as before the first day of the present parliament.*

Such was the great statute of reconciliation with Rome, with which, in the inability to obtain a better, the legate was compelled to be satisfied, and to reconsider his threat of going back to Italy.

A Regency
Bill, unfavourable to Philip, is passed in
the House
of Lords.

This first conflict was no sooner ended than another commenced. The Commons would not consent that Philip should be crowned; but, as the queen was enceinte, provision had to be made for a regency, and a bill was introduced into the Upper House which has not survived, but which, in spirit, was unfavourable to the king.† Gardiner, in the course of the debate, attempted to

* 1 and 2 Philip and Mary, cap. 8, sec. 31.

† 'It was suspected,' says Renard, 'que le dict act se proposoit à mauvais fin, qu'il estoit contre les traictez et capitulation de mariaige pour hereder la couronne

qui venoit de mauvais auteurs quilz plustôt desiroient le mal dudict S. roy et inquietude dudict royaume que le bien.'—Renard to the Emperor: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv. p. 347.

put in a clause affecting Elizabeth,* but the success was no better than usual. The act went down to the Commons, where, however, it was immediately cancelled. Though the Commons would give Philip no rights as king, they were better disposed towards him than the Lords; and they drew another bill of their own, in which they declared the father to be the natural and fitting guardian of the child. The experience of protectorates, they said, had been uniformly unfortunate, and should the queen die leaving an heir, Philip should be regent of the realm during the minority; if obliged to be absent on the Continent, he might himself nominate his deputy;† and so long as it should be his pleasure to remain in England, his person should be under the protection of the laws of high treason.

CH. 32.

A.D. 1555.
January.

The Commons cancel the bill, and draw another in the interest of the Court;

Taking courage from the apparent disposition of the House, the friends of the court proposed that, should the queen die childless, the crown should devolve absolutely upon him for his life.‡ But in this they were going too far. The suggestion was listened to coldly; and Philip, who had really calculated on obtaining from parliament, in some form or other, a security for his succession, despatched Ruy Gomez to Brussels, to consult the Emperor on the course which should be

Nevertheless, they will not give the reversion of the crown to Philip,

* Granvelle Papers, vol. iv. p. 348.

† 'Et que en son absence il y pourra nommer qui luy plaira.' — Granvelle Papers, vol. iv. p. 348.

‡ 'Aulcuns particuliers pro-

posaient en ladicte chambre basse que le dict S. roy deust demeurer roy absolu dudit royaume mourant ladicte dame sans hoirs sa vie durant.' — Granvelle Papers, vol. iv. p. 348.

CH. 32. pursued.* On the whole, however, could the bill of the House of Commons be carried, Renard was disposed to be contented; the queen was confident in her hopes of an heir, and it might not be worth while to irritate the people unnecessarily about Elizabeth.† The clause empowering Philip to govern by deputy in his absence was especially satisfactory.‡

A.D. 1555.
January.

And the peers again
modify the Regency
bill.

But the peers, whom the Commons had refused to consult on the new form of the measure, would not part so easily with their own opinions; they adopted the phraseology of the Lower House, but this particular and precious feature in it they pared away. The bill, as it eventually passed, declared Philip regent till his child should be of age, and so long as he continued in the realm; but, at the same time, fatally for the objects at which he was aiming, it bound him again to observe all the articles of the marriage treaty, 'which, during the time that he should hold the government, should remain and continue in as full force and strength, as if they were newly inserted and rehearsed in the present act.'§

* 'Ruy Gomez est allé vers l'Empereur pour faire entendre les difficultez qu'ilz trouvent de faire demeurer ceste couronne à son dict filz, au cas que la royne sa femme allast de vie à trespaz sans enfans, et d'autant qu'ilz ont congneu la volonté de ceulx oy estre bien loin de leur intention; et pour ce scavoir par quelz moyens il semblera bon audict Empereur qu'on puisse mettre cela en termes devant la fin de ce parlement.'—NOAILLES.

† 'Et quant à la declaration de baptardise l'on n'est d'opinion qu'elle se doige entamer aux dict parlement, puisque l'apparence d'heretier est certaine et pour l'evident et congneue contrarieté que seroit en toute le royanlme.'—Renard to the Emperor: Granvelle Papers, p. 348.

‡ Ibid.

§ 1 and 2 Philip and Mary, cap. 10.

The disposition of the House of Lords was the more dangerous, because the bishops, of course, voted with the government, and the strength of the opposition, therefore, implied something like unanimity in the lay peers. The persecuting act had been carried with difficulty, and in the reconciliation with Rome the legate had been studiously mortified. On the succession and the coronation, the court had been wholly baffled; and in the Regency Bill they had obtained but half of what they had desired. At the least Mary had hoped to secure for the king the free disposal of the army and the finances, and she had not been able so much as to ask for it. Compelled to rest contented with such advantages as had been secured, the court would not risk the results of further controversy by prolonging the session; and on the 16th of January, at four o'clock in the afternoon, the king and queen came to the House of Lords almost unattended, and with an evident expression of dissatisfaction dissolved the parliament.*

CH. 32.

A.D. 1555.
January.

The queen
dissolves
parliament.

* ' Ilz sont pour cejourd'hui bien esloignez de ce qu'ilz pensoient faire il y a six semaines en ce parlement, ou ilz faisoient compte que ne pouvant couronner ce roy ou luy faire succeder ce royaume, à tout le moins de luy en faire tumber l'administration, avecques tel pouvoir sur les forces et finances qu'il en eust peu disposer à sa volonté. Toutefois la chose a prins telle issue que pour ce coup il fault qu'il se contente à beaucoup moins qu'il ne s'attendoit.

' Ce qui a tellement despleu à ledict roy et royne, que le 16 de ce mois ilz allerent par eau tous deux clorre et terminer ledict parlement, sur les quatre heures du soir, assez petitement accompagniez et sans aucune ceremonie, monstrans et faisans congnoistre à ung chascun avoir quelque grand mescontentement contre l'assemblée d'icelluy.'—Noailles to the Constable: Ambassades, vol. iv. p. 153.

CH. 32.

A.D. 1555.

January.

Reaction
has reached
its height,
and the tide begins
to turn.The restoration is more apparent than real, and the recovered
power of
the Church
is over
opinion
only,

I have been particular in relating the proceedings of this parliament, because it marks the point where the flood tide of reaction ceased to ascend, and the ebb recommenced. From the beginning of the Reformation in 1529, two distinct movements had gone on side by side—the alteration of doctrines, and the emancipation of the laity from Papal and ecclesiastical domination. With the first, the contemporaries of Henry VIII., the country gentlemen and the peers, who were the heads of families at the period of Mary's accession, had never sympathized; and the tyranny of the Protestants while they were in power had converted a disapproval which time would have overcome, into active and determined indignation. The Papacy was a mixed question; the Pilgrims of Grace in 1536, and the Cornish rebels in 1549, had demanded the restoration of the spiritual primacy to the See of St. Peter, and Henry himself, until Pole and Paul III. called on Europe to unite in a crusade against him, had not determined wholly against some degree of concession. In the Pope, as a sovereign who claimed reverence and tribute, who interfered with the laws of the land, and maintained at Rome a supreme Court of Appeal—who pretended a right to depose kings and absolve subjects from their allegiance—who held a weapon in excommunication as terrible to the laity as Premunire was terrible to ecclesiastics,—in the Pope under this aspect, only a few insignificant fanatics entertained any kind of interest.

But experience had proved that to a nation cut off from the centre of Catholic union, the maintenance of orthodoxy was impossible: the supremacy of the Pope, therefore, came back as a tolerated feature in the return to the Catholic faith, and the ecclesiastical courts were reinstated in authority to check unlicensed extravagance of opinion. Their restored power, however, was over opinion only; wherever the pretensions of the Church would come in collision with the political constitution, wherever they menaced the independence of the temporal magistrate or the tenure of property, there the progress of restoration was checked by the rock, and could eat no further into the soil. The Pope and the clergy recovered their titular rank, and in one direction unhappily they recovered the reality of power. But the temporal spoils of the struggle remained with the laity, and if the clergy lifted a hand to retake them, their weapons would be instantly wrenched from their grasp.

If the genuine friends of human freedom had acquiesced without resistance in this conclusion, if the nobility had contented themselves with securing their worldly and political interests, and had made no effort to restrain or modify the exercise of the authority which they were giving back, they might be accused of having accepted a dishonourable compromise. But they did what they could. They worked with such legal means as were in their power, and for two parliaments they succeeded in keeping persecution at bay; they failed in the third, but failed only after a struggle. The Protestants themselves had created, by their

CH. 32.

A.D. 1555.
January.

And the laity are but partially to be blamed for the tyranny which the clergy exercised.

CH. 32. own misconduct, the difficulty of defending them ;
 A.D. 1555. and armed unconstitutional resistance was an ex-January. pedient to be resorted to, only when it had been seen how the clergy would conduct themselves.
 English statesmen may be pardoned if they did not anticipate the passions to which the guardians
 of orthodoxy were about to abandon themselves.
 Parliament had maintained the independence of the English courts of law. It had maintained the Premunire. It had forbidden the succession to be tampered with. If this was not everything, it was something—something which in the end would be the undoing of all the rest.

The persecution is about to commence.

The court and the bishops, however, were
 for the present absolute in their own province.
 The persecuting acts were once more upon the Statute Book; and when the realities of the debates in parliament had disappeared, the cardinal and the queen could again give the rein to their imagination. They had called up a phantom out of its grave, and they persuaded themselves that they were witnessing the resurrection of the spirit of truth, that heresy was about to vanish
 from off the English soil, like an exhalation of the morning, at the brightness of the Papal return.
 The chancellor and the clergy were springing at
 the leash like hounds with the game in view, fanaticism and revenge lashing them forward. If the temporal schemes of the court were thwarted,
 it was, perhaps, because Heaven desired that exclusive attention should be given first to the salvation of souls.

For all past political offences, therefore, there was now an amnesty, and such prisoners as remained unexecuted for Wyatt's conspiracy were released from the Tower on the 18th of January. On the 25th a hundred and sixty priests walked in procession through the London streets, chanting litanies, with eight bishops walking after them, and Bonner carrying the Host. On the 28th the cardinal issued his first general instructions. The bishops were directed to call together their clergy in every diocese in England, and to inform them of the benevolent love of the Holy Father, and of the arrival of the legate with powers to absolve them from their guilt. They were to relate the acts of the late parliament, with the reconciliation and absolution of the Lords and Commons; and they were to give general notice that authority had been restored to the ecclesiastical courts, to proceed against the enemies of the faith, and punish them according to law.

CH. 32.

A.D. 1555.

January.

Political offenders receive an amnesty,

And the legate issues his first edict.

A day was then to be fixed on which the clergy should appear with their confessions, and be received into the Church. In the assignment of their several penances, a distinction was to be made between those who had taught heresy and those who had merely lapsed into it.

The bishops are to reconcile the clergy,

When the clergy had been reconciled, they were again in turn to exhort the laity in all churches and cathedrals, to accept the grace which was offered to them; and that they might understand that they were not at liberty to refuse the invitation, a time was assigned to them within which their submissions must be all completed. A book was to be kept in every diocese, where

And the clergy to reconcile the laity.

CH. 32.

A.D. 1554.

January.

The names of all who submit are to be entered in a book, and those who refuse are to suffer.

the names of those who were received were to be entered. A visitation was to be held throughout the country at the end of the spring, and all who had not complied before Easter day, or who, after compliance, 'had returned to their vomit,' would be proceeded against with the utmost severity of the law.*

The introduction of the Register was the Inquisition under another name. There was no limit, except in the humanity or the prudence of the bishops, to the tyranny which they would be enabled to exercise. The cardinal professed to desire that, before heretics were punished with death, mild means should first be tried with them;† the meaning which he attached to the words was illustrated in an instant example.

Jan. 28.
The first heresy
court is opened.

The instructions were the signal for the bishops to commence business. On the day of their appearance Gardiner, Bonner, Tunstal, and three other prelates, formed a court in St. Mary Overy's Church, in Southwark; and Hooper, and Rogers, a canon of St. Paul's, were brought up before them.

Rogers had been distinguished in the first

* Instructions of Cardinal Pole to the Bishops: BURNET's Collectanea.

† The opinion of Pole, on the propriety of putting men to death for nonconformity, was strictly orthodox. He regarded heretics, he said, as rebellious children, with whom persuasion and mild correction should first be tried. 'Nec tamen, negârim fieri posse,' he continued, 'ut alicujus opiniones tam perniciosæ existant, ipseque jam corruptus tam sit ad corrumpendos alios promptus ac sedulus ut non dubitârim dicere eum e vitâ tolli oportere et tanquam putridum membrum e corpore exsecari. Neque id tamen priusquam ejus sanandi causâ omnis leviter medendi tentata sit ratio.—Pole to the Cardinal of Augsburg: Epist. REG. POL. vol. iv.

bright days of Protestantism. He had been a fellow-labourer with Tyndal and Coverdale, at Antwerp, in the translation of the Bible. Afterwards, taking a German wife, he lived for a time at Wittenberg, not unknown, we may be sure, to Martin Luther. On the accession of Edward, he returned to England, and worked among the London clergy till the end of the reign; and on Mary's accession he was one of the preachers at Paul's Cross who had dared to speak against the reaction. He had been rebuked by the council, and his friends had urged him to fly; but, like Cranmer, he thought that duty required him to stay at his post, and, in due time, without, however, having given fresh provocation, he was shut up in Newgate by Bonner.

CH. 32.
A.D. 1555.
January.
Rogers is brought up
for trial,

Hooper, when the unfortunate garment controversy was brought to an end, had shown by his conduct in his diocese that in one instance at least doctrinal fanaticism was compatible with the loftiest excellence. While the great world was scrambling for the Church property, Hooper was found petitioning the council for leave to augment impoverished livings out of his own income.* In the hall of his palace at Gloucester a profuse hospitality was offered daily to those who were most in need of it. The poor of the city were invited by relays to solid meat dinners, and the bishop with the courtesy of a gentleman dined with them, and treated them with the same respect as if they had been the highest in the

And Hooper is brought up
with him,

* Privy Council Register, Edward VI. MS.

CH. 32. land. He was one of the first persons arrested after Mary's accession, and the cross of persecu-
 A.D. 1555. tion at once happily made his peace with Ridley.
 January. In an affectionate interchange of letters, the two confessors exhorted each other to constancy in the end which both foresaw, determining 'if they could not overthrow, at least, to shake those high altitudes' of spiritual tyranny.* The Fleet prison had now been Hooper's house for eighteen months. At first, on payment of heavy fees to the warden, he had lived in some degree of comfort; but as soon as his deprivation was declared, Gardiner ordered that he should be confined in one of the common prisoners' wards; where
 'with a wicked man and a wicked woman' for his companions, with a bed of straw and a rotten counterpane, the prison sink on one side of his cell and Fleet ditch on the other, he waited till it would please parliament to permit the dignitaries of the Church to murder him.†

After
 eighteen months'
 imprisonment in the Fleet.

Hooper and Rogers are required to submit.

These were the two persons with whom the Marian persecution opened. On their appearance in the court, they were required briefly to make their submission. They attempted to argue; but they were told that when parliament had determined a thing, private men were not to call it in question, and they were allowed twenty-four hours to make up their minds.
 As they were leaving the church Hooper was heard to say, 'Come, brother Rogers, must we

* Correspondence between Hooper and Ridley: FOXE, vol. vi.

† Account of Hooper's Imprisonment, by himself: FOXE, vol. vi.

two take this matter first in hand and fry these faggots?' 'Yea, sir, with God's grace,' Rogers answered. 'Doubt not,' Hooper said, 'but God will give us strength.'

CH. 32.

A.D. 1553.
Jan. 29.

They were remanded to prison. The next morning they were brought again before the court. 'The queen's mercy' was offered them, if they would recant; they refused, and they were sentenced to die. Rogers asked to be allowed to take leave of his wife and children. Gardiner, with a savage taunt, refused. The day of execution was left uncertain. They were sent to Newgate to wait the queen's pleasure. On the 30th, Taylor of Hadley, Laurence Sandars, rector of All Hallows, and the illustrious Bradford, were passed through the same forms with the same results. Another, a notorious preacher, called Cardmaker, flinched, and made his submission.

They refuse, and are sentenced to die.

Rogers was to 'break the ice,' as Bradford described it.* On the morning of the 4th of February the wife of the keeper of Newgate came to his bedside. He was sleeping soundly, and she woke him with difficulty to let him know that he was wanted. The Bishop of London was waiting, she said, to degrade him from the priesthood, and he was then to go out and die. Rubbing his eyes, and collecting himself, he hurried on his clothes. 'If it be thus,' he said, 'I need not tie my points.' Hooper had been sent for also for the ceremony of degradation. The vestments used in the mass were

Feb. 4.
Rogers is called from
his bed,
and degraded by Bonner.

* Bradford to Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer: FOXE.

CH. 32. thrown over them, and were then one by one removed. They were pronounced deposed from the priestly office, incapable of offering further sacrifice — except, indeed, the only acceptable sacrifice which man can ever offer, the sacrifice of himself. Again Rogers entreated permission to see his wife, and again he was refused.

A.D. 1555.
January.

He is taken to Smithfield, again offered pardon on recantation,

The two friends were then parted. Hooper was to suffer at Gloucester, and returned to his cell; Rogers was committed to the sheriff, and led out to Smithfield. The Catholics had affected to sneer at the faith of their rivals. There was a general conviction among them, which was shared probably by Pole and Gardiner, that the Protestants would all flinch at the last; that they had no 'doctrine that would abide the fire.' When Rogers appeared, therefore, the exultation of the people in his constancy overpowered the horror of his fate, and he was received with rounds of cheers. His family, whom he was forbidden to part with in private, were waiting on the way to see him—his wife with nine little ones at her side and a tenth upon her breast—and they, too, welcomed him with hysterical cries of joy, as if he were on his way to a festival.* Sir

* 'Cejourd'hui a esté faicte la confirmation de l'alliance entre le Pape et ce Royaulme par ung sacrifice publique et solempnel d'ung docteur predicant nommé Rogerus, lequel a esté brulé tout vif pour estre Lutherien; mais il est mort persistant en son opinion, à quoy la plus grand part de ce peuple a prins tel

plaisir qu'ilz n'ont eu craincte de luy faire plusieurs acclamations pour conforter son courage; et mesmes ses enfans y ont assistés le consolantes de telle façon qu'il sembloit qu'on le menast aux nopces.—Noailles to Montmorency: Ambassades, vol. iv.

Robert Rochester was in attendance at the stake to report his behaviour. At the last moment he was offered pardon if he would give way, but in vain. The fire was lighted. The suffering seemed to be nothing. He bathed his hands in the flame as 'if it was cold water,' raised his eyes to heaven, and died.

CH. 32.

A.D. 1555.

Feb. 4.

Monday.

And again refusing, he is burnt.

The same night a party of the royal guard took charge of Hooper, the order of whose execution was arranged by a mandate from the crown. As 'an obstinate, false, and detestable heretic,' he was to be burned in the city 'which he had infected with his pernicious doctrines;' and 'forasmuch as being a vain-glorious person, and delighting in his tongue,' he 'might persuade the people into agreement with him, had he liberty to use it,' care was to be taken that he should not speak either at the stake or on his way to it.* He was carried down on horseback by easy stages; and on the forenoon of Thursday, the 7th, he dined at Cirencester, 'at a woman's house who had always hated the truth, and spoken all evil she could of him.' This woman had shared in the opinion that Protestants had no serious convictions, and had often expressed her belief that Hooper, particularly, would fail if brought to the trial. She found that both in him and in his creed there was more than she had supposed; and 'perceiving the causes of his coming, she lamented his case with tears, and showed him all the friendship she could.'

Hooper is sent to Gloucester, with orders that he shall not be allowed to speak at his execution.

* Mandate for the Execution of Hooper: BURNET'S Collectanea.

CH. 32.

A.D. 1555.
February.

At five in the evening he arrived at Gloucester. The road, for a mile outside the town, was lined with people, and the mayor was in attendance, with an escort, to prevent a rescue. But the feeling was rather of awe and expectation, and those who loved Hooper best knew that the highest service which he could render to his faith was to die for it.

He is allowed a day to prepare for death.

Feb. 8.
Sir Anthony Kingston visits him.

A day's interval of preparation was allowed him, with a private room. He was in the custody of the sheriff; 'and there was this difference observed between the keepers of the bishops' prisons and the keepers of the crown prisons, that the bishops' keepers were ever cruel; the keepers of the crown prisons showed, for the most part, such favour as they might.* After a sound night's rest, Hooper rose early, and passed the morning in solitary prayer. In the course of the day, young Sir Anthony Kingston, one of the commissioners appointed to superintend the execution, expressed a wish to see him. Kingston was an old acquaintance, Hooper having been the means of bringing him out of evil ways. He entered the room unannounced. Hooper was on his knees, and, looking round at the intruder, did not at first know him. Kingston told him his name, and then, bursting into tears, said:—

'Oh, consider; life is sweet and death is bitter; therefore, seeing life may be had, desire to live, for life hereafter may do good.'

Hooper answered:—

‘I thank you for your counsel, yet it is not so friendly as I could have wished it to be. True it is, alas! Master Kingston, that death is bitter and life is sweet; therefore I have settled myself, through the strength of God’s Holy Spirit, patiently to pass through the fire prepared for me, desiring you and others to commend me to God’s mercy in your prayers.’

CH. 32.
A.D. 1555.
Feb. 8.

‘Well, my Lord,’ said Kingston, ‘then there is no remedy, and I will take my leave. I thank God that ever I knew you, for God appointed you to call me, being a lost child. I was both an adulterer and a fornicator, and God, by your good instruction, brought me to the forsaking of the same.’

And tells him he thanks God that he has known him.

They parted, the tears on both their faces. Other friends were admitted afterwards. The queen’s orders were little thought of, for Hooper had won the hearts of the guard on his way from London. In the evening the mayor and aldermen came, with the sheriffs, to shake hands with him. ‘It was a sign of their good will,’ he said, ‘and a proof that they had not forgotten the lessons which he used to teach them.’ He begged the sheriffs that there might be ‘a quick fire, to make an end shortly;’ and for himself he would be as obedient as they could wish.

The citizens come to take leave.

‘If you think I do amiss in anything,’ he said, ‘hold up your fingers, and I have done; for I am not come hither as one enforced or compelled to die; I might have had my life, as is well known, with worldly gain, if I would have accounted my doctrine falsehood and heresy.’

CH. 32.

A.D. 1555.
Feb. 9.

In the evening, at his own request he was left alone. He slept undisturbed the early part of the night. From the time that he woke till the guard entered, he was on his knees.

The morning was windy and wet. The scene of the execution was an open space opposite the college, near a large elm tree, where Hooper had been accustomed to preach. Several thousand people were collected to see him suffer; some had climbed the tree, and were seated in the storm and rain among the leafless branches. A company of priests were in a room over the college gates, looking out with pity or satisfaction, as God or the devil was in their hearts.

Hooper is
taken to
the stake.

‘Alas!’ said Hooper, when he was brought out, ‘why be all these people assembled here, and speech is prohibited me?’ He had suffered in prison from sciatica, and was lame, but he limped cheerfully along with a stick, and smiled when he saw the stake. At the foot of it he knelt; and as he began to pray, a box was brought, and placed on a stool before his eyes, which he was told contained his pardon if he would recant.

‘Away with it!’ Hooper only cried; ‘away with it!’

‘Despatch him, then,’ Lord Chandos said, ‘seeing there is no remedy.’

He was undressed to his shirt, in the cold; a pound of gunpowder was tied between his legs, and as much more under either arm; he was fastened with an iron hoop to the stake, and he assisted with his own hands to arrange the faggots round him.

The fire was then brought, but the wood was green; the dry straw only kindled, and burning for a few moments was blown away by the wind. A violent flame paralysed the nerves at once, a slow one was torture. More faggots were thrown in, and again lighted, and this time the martyr's face was singed and scorched; but again the flames sank, and the hot damp sticks smouldered round his legs. He wiped his eyes with his hands, and cried, 'For God's love, good people, let me have more fire!' A third supply of dry fuel was laid about him, and this time the powder exploded, but it had been ill-placed, or was not enough. 'Lord Jesu, have mercy on me!' he exclaimed; 'Lord Jesu, receive my spirit!' These were his last articulate words; but his lips were long seen to move, and he continued to beat his breast with his hands. It was not till after three quarters of an hour of torment that he at last expired.

CH. 32.
A.D. 1555.
Feb. 9.
The wood is wet, and the fire will not burn.

After three quarters of an hour of torture, Hooper dies.

The same day, at the same hour, Rowland Taylor was burnt on Aldham Common, in Suffolk. Laurence Sandars had been destroyed the day before at Coventry, kissing the stake, and crying 'Welcome the cross of Christ! welcome everlasting life!' The first-fruits of the Whitehall pageant were gathered. By the side of the rhetoric of the hysterical dreamer who presided in that vain melodrama, let me place a few words addressed by the murdered Bishop of Gloucester to his friends, a week before his sentence.

Taylor and Sandars are burnt also.

'The grace of God be with you, amen. I did write unto you of late, and told you what extre-

Hooper's parting letter to his friends.

CH. 32. mity the parliament had concluded upon concerning religion, suppressing the truth, and
A.D. 1555. setting forth the untruth; intending to cause all February. men, by extremity, to forswear themselves; and to take again for the head of the Church him that is neither head nor member of it, but a very enemy, as the word of God and all ancient writers do record. And for lack of law and authority they will use force and extremity, which have been the arguments to defend the Pope and Popery since their authority first began in the world. But now is the time of trial, to see whether we fear more God or man. It was an easy thing to hold with Christ whilst the prince and the world held with him; but now the world hateth him, it is the true trial who be his.

‘Wherefore in the name, and in the virtue, strength, and power of his Holy Spirit, prepare yourselves in any case to adversity and constancy. Let us not run away when it is most time to fight. Remember, none shall be crowned but such as fight manfully; and he that endureth to the end shall be saved. Ye must now turn your cogitations from the perils you see, and mark the felicity that followeth the peril—either victory in this world of your enemies, or else a surrender of this life to inherit the everlasting kingdom. Beware of beholding too much the felicity or misery of this world; for the consideration and too earnest love or fear of either of them draweth from God. Wherefore think with yourselves as touching the felicity of the world, it is good; but none otherwise than it standeth with the favour of God; it is to be kept, but yet so far forth as by keeping it we lose not God. It is good abiding and tarrying still among our friends

here, but yet so that we tarry not therewithal
in God's displeasure, and hereafter dwell with the devils in fire everlasting. There is nothing under God but may be kept, so that God, being above all things we have, be not lost. Of adversity judge the same. Imprisonment is painful, but yet liberty upon evil conditions is more painful. The prisons stink; but yet not so much as sweet houses, where the fear and true honour of God lack. I must be alone and solitary; it is better so to be, and have God with me, than to be in company with the wicked. Loss of goods is great, but loss of God's grace and favour is greater.
I am a poor simple creature, and cannot tell how to answer before such a great sort of noble, learned, and wise men. It is better to make answer before the pomp and pride of wicked men,
than to stand naked, in the sight of all heaven
and earth, before the just God at the latter day.
I shall die by the hands of the cruel men; but he is blessed that loseth this life full of miseries, and findeth the life of eternal joys. It is pain and grief to depart from goods and friends; but yet
not so much as to depart from grace and heaven itself. Wherefore there is neither felicity nor adversity of this world that can appear to be great, if it be weighed with the joys or pains in the world to come.*

CH. 32.
A.D. 1555.
February.

* Hooper to his Friends: FOXE, vol. vi.

CH. 32.

A.D. 1555.
February.The heretics shall submit, or die.The country is agitated, and Philip,
through
his confessor, dis-claims all share in the executions.He proposes to leave the country,
and Renard
begs that he may not be left behind.

Of five who had been sentenced, four were thus despatched. Bradford, the fifth, was respited, in the hope that the example might tell upon him. Six more were waiting their condemnation in Bonner's prisons. The enemies of the Church were to submit or die. So said Gardiner, in the name of the English priesthood, with the passion of a fierce revenge. So said the legate and the queen, in the delirious belief that they were chosen instruments of Providence.

So, however, did not say the English lay statesmen. The first and unexpected effect was to produce a difference of opinion in the court itself. Philip, to whom Renard had insisted on the necessity of more moderate measures, found it necessary to clear himself of responsibility; and the day after Hooper suffered, Alphonso a Castro, the king's chaplain, preached a sermon in the royal presence, in which he denounced the execution, and inveighed against the tyranny of the bishops. The Lords of the Council 'talked strangely;' and so deep was the indignation, that the Flemish ambassador again expected Gardiner's destruction. Paget refused to act with him in the council any more, and Philip himself talked more and more of going abroad. Renard, from the tone of his correspondence, believed evidently at this moment that the game of the Church was played out and lost. He wrote to the Emperor to entreat that when the king went he might not himself be left behind; he was held responsible by the people for the queen's misdoings; and a party of the young nobility CH. 32.

had sworn to kill him.*

Among the people the constancy of the martyrs had called out a burst of admiration. It was rumoured that bystanders had endeavoured to throw themselves into the fire to die at their side.† A prisoner, on examination before Bonner, was asked if he thought he could bear the flame. You may try me, if you will, he said. A candle was brought, and he held his hand, without flinching, in the blaze.‡ With such a humour

A.D. 1555.
February.
The burn-
ings do not produce
the effect
which was anticipated.

* 'L'évesque de Londres avec les autres évesques assemblée en ce lieu pour l'exécution du statut conclu en dernier Parlement sur le faict de la religion, a fait brusler trois hérétiques; l'ung en ce lieu et les deux autres en pays; et sont après pour continuer contre les obstinez: dont les nobles et le peuple heretique murmure et s'altère; selon que l'ay faict entendre au roy par ung billet par escript duquel la copie va avec les presentes; et a la noblesse tousjours désiré d'avoir occasion d'attirer le peuple et le faire joindre à révolte avec elle; et prévoys si Dieu n'y remédie, ou que telle precipitation ne se modere, les choses prendront dangereux succès, et signamment les partiaulx, contre le chancelier ne perdront ceste commodité de vengeance. . . . Les dictes conseilliers se retirent de negoces. Paget se voyant en la male grace de la royne, et de la pluspart de conseil, se trouve souvent au quartier du-dict Sieur roy . . le peuple parle contre la royne estrangement Comme j'entendz que l'on parle pour me faire demeurer, et séjourner par deça après le départ du roy, je n'ay peu delaisser de supplier tres humblement vostre majesté me excuser. . je suys certain l'on me tueroit ineontinant après ledict parlement,' &c. — Renard to Charles V.: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv. pp. 400–402.

† 'Et a l'on dict que plusieurs . . se sont voulu volontairement mettre sur le bûche à costé de ceulx que l'on bruloit.'—Ibid. p. 404.

‡ 'Un bourgeois estant interrogué par ledict évesque de Londres se souffriroit bien le feug, respondist qu'il en fist l'experience: et aiant fait apporter une chandelle allumée il meit la main dessus sans la retirer ny se mouvoir.'—Renard to Charles V.: Granvelle Papers, vol. vi. p. 404. The man's name was Tomkins. Foxe, who

CH. 32. abroad, it seemed to Renard that the Lords had only to give the signal, and the queen and the bishops would be overwhelmed.

A.D. 1555.
February.
Renard expects an immediate revolution.

He expected the movement in the spring. It is singular that precisely, as in the preceding winter, the deliberate intentions of moderate and competent persons were anticipated and defeated by a partial and premature conspiracy. At the end of February a confederate revealed a project for an insurrection, partly religious and partly agrarian.

An ill-considered plot is discovered, by which the court is strengthened.

Placards were to be issued simultaneously in all parts of the country, declaring that the queen's pregnancy was a delusion, and that she intended to pass upon the nation a supposititious child; the people were, therefore, invited to rise in arms, drive out the Spaniards, revolutionize religion, tear down the enclosures of the commons, and proclaim Courtenay king under the title of Edward VII.* In such a scheme the lords and country gentlemen could bear no part. They could not risk a repetition of the popular rebellions of the late reign, and they resolved to wait the issue of the queen's pregnancy, while they watched over the safety of Elizabeth. The project of the court was now to send her to Flanders, where she was to remain under charge of the Emperor; if possible, she was to be persuaded to go thither of her own accord; if she could not be persuaded,

Elizabeth is to be sent to Flanders, but she is protected by Lord William Howard.

tells the story as an illustration of Bonner's brutality, says that the bishop himself held the hand. But Renard's is probably the truer version.

* Renard to Charles V.: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv. p. 403.

she would be otherwise removed. Lord William Howard, her constant guardian, requested permission to see and speak with her, and learn her own feelings. He was refused; but he went to her notwithstanding, and had a long private interview with her; and the court could only talk bitterly of his treason among themselves, make propositions to send him to the Tower which they durst not execute, and devise some other method of dealing with their difficulty.*

CH. 32.
A.D. 1555.
February.

Meantime, Philip, who had pined for freedom after six weeks' experience of his bride, was becoming unmanageably impatient. A paper of advice and exhortation survives, which was addressed on this occasion by the ambassador to his master, with reflections on the condition of England, and on the conduct which the king should pursue.

Philip grows impatient, and Renard cautions him,

'Your Majesty must remember,' said Renard, 'the purpose for which you came to England. The French had secured the Queen of Scotland for the Dauphin. They had afterwards made an alliance with the late king, and spared no pains to secure the support of England. To counteract their schemes, and to obtain a counteradvantage in the war, the Emperor, on the accession of the queen, resolved that your Highness should marry her. Your Highness, it is true, might wish that she was more agreeable;† but, on the other hand,

* Renard to Charles V.: requerir plus de civilité en la Granvelle Papers, vol. iv. pp. 404, 405. Reyne.'—Renard to Philip: Ibid. p. 394.

† Et combien l'on pouvoit

CH. 32. she is infinitely virtuous, and, things being as they are, your Highness, like a magnanimous prince, must remember her condition, and exert yourself, so far as you conveniently may, to assist her in the management of the kingdom.

A.D. 1555.
February.

And sets
before him
the duties
of a husband to his wife.

‘Your Highness must consider that your departure will be misrepresented, your enemies will speak of it as a flight rather than as a necessary absence. The French will be busy with their intrigues, and the queen will not be pleased to lose you. The administration is in confusion, the divisions in the council are more violent than ever. Religion is unsettled; the heretics take advantage of these late barbarous punishments to say, that they are to be converted by fire, because their enemies are unable to convince them by reason or example. The orthodox clergy are still unreformed, and their scandalous conduct accords ill with the offices to which they are called.*

The succession must be settled
before he leaves
England;

‘Further, your Highness will do well to weigh the uncertainty of the succession. Should the queen’s pregnancy prove a mistake, the heretics will place their hopes in Elizabeth: and here you are in a difficulty whatever be done; for if Elizabeth be set aside, the crown will go to the Queen of Scots; if she succeed, she will restore heresy, and naturally attach herself to France. Some step must be taken about this before you leave

* ‘Les gens d’église ne sont reformées, il y a plusieurs abus qui donnent scandale et mauvaise impression, et ilz ne re- spondent aux offices auxquels ilz sont appelez.’—Renard to Philip: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv. p. 395.

the country; and you must satisfy the queen that you will assist her in her general difficulties, as a good lord and husband ought to do.*

CH. 32.

A.D. 1555.
February.

'The council must be reformed, if possible, and the number diminished; those who remain must be invited to renew their oaths to your Majesty. Regard must be had to the navy, and especially to the admiral Lord William Howard; and above all there must be no more of this barbarous precipitancy in putting heretics to death. The people must be won from their errors by gentleness and by better instruction. Except in cases of especial scandal, the bishops must not be permitted to irritate them by cruelty, and the legate must see that a better example is set by the clergy themselves.† The debts of the crown must be attended to; and your Majesty should endeavour to do something which will give you popularity with the masses. Before all things, attend to the succession.

The persecution must be put an end to;

'You cannot set aside the dispositions of King Henry in favour of Elizabeth without danger of rebellion. To recognise her as heir presumptive without providing her with a husband, who can

And since Elizabeth cannot be got rid of,

* 'Donner ce contentement à la royne d'avoir intention de asseurer et establir ses affaires et la secourir comme bon Seigneur et mari.'

† 'Que ès choses de la religion l'on ne use de precipitation par punition cruelle, ains avec la moderation, et mansuetude requise, et dont l'eglise a toujours usé; retirant le peuple de l'erreur par doctrine et predication, et que si ce n'est un acte scandaleux l'on ne passe oultre en chastoy que puisse alterer le peuple et le desgouter, que la reformation requise pour le bon exemple, soit introduicte sur les gens de l'eglise comme le legat advisera pour le mieulx.'

—Renard to Philip: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv. p. 395.

CH. 32. control her, will be perilous to the queen. The mean course between the extremes, will be therefore, for your Highness to bring about her marriage with the Prince of Savoy. It will please the English, provided that her rights of inheritance are not interfered with; and although they will not go to war for our quarrel, they will not in that case be unwilling to assist in expelling the French from Piedmont.

A.D. 1555.
February.
Let her be married to the Prince of Savoy.

‘If your Majesty approve, the thing can be done without delay. At all events, before you leave the country, you should see the Princess yourself; give her your advice to be faithful to her sister, and, on your part, promise that you will be her friend, and assist her where you can find opportunity.’

CHAPTER XXXIII.

THE MARTYRS.

THE protests of Renard against the persecution received no attention. CH. 33:

The inquisition established by the legate was not to commence till Easter; but the prisons were already abundantly supplied with persons who had been arrested on various pretexts, and the material was ready in hand to occupy the interval. The four persons who had first suffered had been conspicuous among the leaders of the Reformation; but the bishops were for the most part prudent in their selection of victims, and chose them principally from among the poor and unfriended. A.D. 1555.
February.

On the 9th of February, a weaver named Tomkins, (the man who had held his hand in the candle), Pigot, a butcher, Knight, a barber, Hunter, an apprentice boy of 19, Lawrence, a priest, and Hawkes, a gentleman, were brought before Bonner in the Consistory at St. Paul's, where they were charged with denying transubstantiation, and were condemned to die. The indignation which had been excited by the first executions caused a delay in carrying the sen- The persecution continues.

CH. 33. tence into effect; but as the menace of insurrection died away the wolves came back to their prey. On the 9th of March, two more were condemned also, Thomas Causton and Thomas Higbed, men of some small property in Essex. To disperse the effect, these eight were scattered about the diocese. Tomkins died at Smithfield on the 16th of March; Causton and Higbed, Pigot and Knight, in different parts of Essex; Hawkes suffered later; Lawrence was burnt at Colchester. The legs of the latter had been crushed by irons in one of Bonner's prisons; he was unable to stand, and was placed at the stake in a chair. 'At his burning, he sitting in the fire, the young children came about and cried, as well as young children could speak, Lord strengthen thy servant, and keep thy promise — Lord, strengthen thy servant, and keep thy promise.'*

A.D. 1555.
February.

Eight more persons are sentenced
in the diocese of London.

Story of William
Hunter, a London apprentice.

Hunter's case deserves more particular mention. The London apprentices had been affected deeply by the Reforming preachers. It was to them that the servant of Anne Askew 'made her moan,' and gathered subscriptions for her mistress. William Hunter, who was one of them, had been ordered to attend mass by a priest when it was re-established; he had refused, and his master, fearing that he might be brought into trouble, had sent him home to his family at Brentwood, in Essex.† Another priest, going

* FOXE, vol. vi.

† The story of Hunter was left in writing by his brother, and was printed by Foxe. I have already said that whenever Foxe prints documents, instead of relating hearsays, I have found him uniformly trustworthy; so far, that is to say, as there are means of testing him.

one day into Brentwood Church, found Hunter CH. 33.
reading the Bible there.

Could he expound Scripture, that he read it thus to himself? the priest asked. He was reading for his comfort, Hunter replied; he did not take on himself to expound. The Bible taught him how to live, and how to distinguish between right and wrong.

A.D. 1555.
March.
Hunter,
reading the Bible, is warned by a priest.

It was never merry world, the priest said,
since the Bible came forth in English. He saw what Hunter was—he was one of those who disliked the queen's laws, and he and other heretics
would broil for it before all was over.

The boy's friends thought it prudent that he should fly to some place where he was not known;
but, as soon as he was gone, a Catholic magistrate in the neighbourhood required his father to produce him, on peril of being arrested in his place; and, after a struggle of affection, in which the father offered to shield his son at his own hazard, young Hunter returned and surrendered.

The magistrate sent him to the Bishop of London, who kept him in prison three quarters of a year. When the persecution commenced,
he was called up for examination.

He is arrested, and
sent to London.

Bonner, though a bigot and a ruffian, had, at times, a coarse good-nature in him, and often, in moments of pity, thrust an easy recantation
upon a hesitating prisoner. He tried with emphatic anxiety to save this young apprentice.
'If thou wilt recant,' he said to him, 'I will make thee a freeman in the city, and give thee
forty pounds in money to set up thy occupation

Bonner endeavours
to persuade him to recant.

CH. 33. withal; or I will make thee steward of mine house, and set thee in office, for I like thee well.'

A.D. 1555.
March.

Hunter thanked him for his kindness; but it could not be, he said; he must stand to the truth: he could not lie, or pretend to believe what he did not believe. Bonner said, and probably with sincere conviction, that if he persisted he would be damned for ever. Hunter said, that God judged more righteously, and justified those whom man unjustly condemned.

He refuses:
he is sentenced to death, and sent to his native village to suffer.

He was therefore to die with the rest; and on Saturday, the 23rd of March, he was sent to suffer at his native village. Monday, being the feast of the Annunciation, the execution was postponed till Tuesday. The intervening time he was allowed to spend with his friends 'in the parlour of the Swan Inn.' His father prayed that he might continue to the end in the way that he had begun. His mother said, she was happy to bear a child who could find in his heart to lose his life for Christ's sake. 'Mother,' he answered, 'for my little pain which I shall suffer, which is but a short braid, Christ hath promised me a crown of joy. May you not be glad of that, mother?'

He is taken to the place
of execution.

Amidst such words the days past. Tuesday morning the sheriff's son came and embraced him, 'bade him not be afraid,' and 'could speak no more for weeping.' When the sheriff came himself for him, he took his brother's arm and walked calmly to the place of execution, 'at the town's end, where the butts stood.'

His father was at the roadside as he passed.

‘God be with thee, son William!’ the old man said. ‘God be with thee, good father,’ the son answered, ‘and be of good comfort!’

CH. 33.

A.D. 1555.
March.

When he was come to the stake, he took one of the faggots, knelt upon it, and prayed for a few moments. The sheriff read the pardon with the conditions. ‘I shall not recant,’ he said, and walked to the post, to which he was chained.

‘Pray for me, good people, while you see me alive,’ he said to the crowd.

‘Pray for thee!’ said the magistrate who had committed him, ‘I will no more pray for thee than I will pray for a dog.’

‘Son of God,’ Hunter exclaimed, ‘shine on me!’ The sun broke out from behind a cloud and blazed in glory on his face.

He prays
at the stake. A priest insults him,
and he dies.

The faggots were set on fire.

‘Look,’ shrieked a priest, ‘how thou burnest here, so shalt thou burn in hell!’

The martyr had a Prayer-book in his hands, which he cast through the flames to his brother.

‘William,’ said the brother, ‘think on the holy passion of Christ, and be not afraid of death.’

‘I am not afraid,’ were his last words. ‘Lord, Lord, Lord, receive my spirit!’

Ten days later another victim was sacrificed at Carmarthen, whose fate was peculiarly unprovoked and cruel.

Robert Ferrars, who twenty-seven years before carried a faggot with Anthony Dalaber in High-street at Oxford, had been appointed by Somerset Bishop of St. David’s. He was a man of large

Story of Robert
Ferrars,
Bishop of St. David’s.

CH. 33. humanity, justice, and uprightness—neither con-
 A.D. 1555. spicuous as a theologian nor prominent as a March. preacher, but remarkable chiefly for good sense and a kindly imaginative tenderness. He had found his diocese infected with the general disorders of the times. The Chapter were indulging themselves to the utmost in questionable pleasures. The Church patronage was made the prey of a nest of Cathedral lawyers, and, in an evil hour for himself, the bishop endeavoured to make crooked things straight.

Ferrars,
 finding his diocese corrupt, attempts a reformation.

The Chapter of St.
 David's present a series of accusations
 against
 him ;

After three years of struggle, his unruly canons were unable to endure him longer, and forwarded to the Duke of Northumberland an elaborate series of complaints against him. He was charged with neglecting his books and his preaching, and spending his time in surveying
 the lands of the see, and opening mines. He kept no manner of hospitality, it was said, but dined at the same table with his servants; and his talk was 'not of godliness,' 'but of worldly matters, as baking, brewing, enclosing, ploughing, mining, millstones, discharging of tenants,
 and such like.'

'To declare his folly in riding' (these are the literal words of the accusation), he useth a bridle
 with white studs and snaffle, white Scottish stirrups, white spurs; a Scottish pad, with a little staff of three quarters [of a yard] long.'

'He said he would go to parliament on foot;
 and to his friends that dissuaded him, alleging that it was not meet for a man in his place, he answered, I care not for that; it is no sin.

‘Having a son, he went before the midwife to the church, presenting the child to the priest; and giving the name Samuel with a solemn interpretation of the name,* appointed two godfathers and two godmothers contrary to the ordinance, making his son a monster and himself a laughing-stock.

CH. 33.

A.D. 1553.
March.

‘He daily useth whistling of his child, and saith that he understood his whistle when he was but three years old; and being advertised of his friends that men laughed at his folly, he answered, They whistle their horses and dogs: they might also be contented that I whistle my child; and so whistleth him daily, friendly admonition neglected.

As, for instance, that he is fond of playing with his child;

‘In his visitation, among other his surveys, he surveyed Milford Haven, where he espied a seal-fish tumbling, and he crept down to the rocks by the water side, and continued there whistling by the space of an hour, persuading the company that laughed fast at him, he made the fish to tarry there.

‘Speaking of the scarcity of herrings, he laid the fault to the covetousness of fishers, who in time of plenty took so many that they destroyed the breeders.

And that he had said that, when want follows waste, the waste is the cause of want.

‘Speaking of the alteration of the coin, he wished that what metal soever it was made of, the penny should be in weight worth a penny of the same metal.’

* Wherefore it came to pass that Hannah bare a son, and called his name Samuel, saying, Because I have asked him of the Lord. 1 Samuel i. 20.

CH. 33.

A.D. 1555.
March.He condescends to defend
himself.

Such were the charges against Ferrars, which, notwithstanding, were considered serious enough to require an answer; and the bishop consented to reply.

He dined with his servants, he said, because the hall of the palace was in ruins, and for their comfort he allowed them to eat in his own room. For his hospitality, he appealed to his neighbours; and for his conversation, he said that he suited it to his hearers. He talked of religion to religious men; to men of the world, he talked 'of honest worldly things with godly intent.' He saw no folly in having his horse decently appointed; and as to walking to parliament, it was indifferent to him whether he walked or rode. God had given him a child, after lawful prayer, begotten in honest marriage; he had therefore named him Samuel, and presented him to the minister as a poor member of Christ's Church; it was done openly in the cathedral, without offending any one. The crime of whistling he admitted, 'thinking it better to bring up his son with loving entertainment,' to encourage him to receive afterwards more serious lessons. He had whistled to the seal; and 'such as meant folly might turn it to their purpose.' He had said that the destruction of the fry of fish prevented fish from multiplying, because he believed it to be true.

Answered or unanswered, it is scarcely credible that such accusations should have received attention; but the real offence lay behind, and is indicated in a vague statement that he had exposed himself to a premunire. The exquisite iniquity of the Northumberland administration could not endure a bishop who had opposed the corrupt administration of patronage; and the explanation being held as insufficient, Ferrars was summoned to London and thrown into prison, where Mary's accession found him.

CH. 33.

A.D. 1555.

March.

But the Duke of Northumberland commits him to prison, where Gardiner finds him,

Cut off in this way from the opportunities of escape which were so long open to others, the bishop remained in confinement till the opening of the persecution. He was deposed from his see by Gardiner's first commission, as having been married; otherwise, however, Ferrars was unobnoxious politically and personally. Being in prison, he had been incapable of committing any fresh offence against the queen, and might reasonably have been forgotten or passed over. But he had been a bishop, and he was ready caught to the hands of the authorities; and Mary had been compelled unwillingly to release a more conspicuous offender, Miles Coverdale, at the intercession of the King of Denmark. Ferrars was therefore brought before Gardiner on the 4th of February. On the 14th he was sent into Wales to be tried by Morgan, his successor at St. David's, and Constantine, the notary of the diocese, who had been one of his accusers. By these judges, on the 11th of March, he was condemned and degraded; he appealed to the legate, but the legate never listened to the prayer of heretics; the legate's mission was to extirpate them. On Saturday the 30th of March, Ferrars

And sends him to Wales to be tried by his accusers, where he is condemned, and burnt.

CH. 33. was brought to the stake in the market-place at Carmarthen.*

A.D. 1555.
April.

The same
work goes on else-
where.

Rawlins White, an aged Cardiff fisherman, followed Ferrars. In the course of April, George Marsh, a curate, was burnt at Chester; and on the 24th of April, a man named William Flower, who had been once a monk of Ely, was burnt in Palace-yard, at Westminster. Flower had provoked his own fate. He appeared on Easter day in St. Margaret's Church, while mass was being said; and provoked, as he persuaded himself, by the Holy Spirit, he flew upon the officiating priest, and stabbed him with a dagger in the hand; when, to the horror of pious Catholics, the blood spurted into the chalice, and was mixed with the consecrated elements.†

Sixteen persons had now been put to death, and there was again a pause for the sharp surgery to produce its effects.

Julius III.
dies; Pole
is a candidate for the Papacy,
but fails.

While Mary was destroying the enemies of the Church, Julius the Third had died at the end of March, and Reginald Pole was again a candidate for the vacant Chair. The Courts of Paris and Brussels alike promised him their support, but alike gave their support to another. They flattered his virtues, but they permitted Marcellus Cervino, the Cardinal of St. Cross, to be elected unanimously; and the English legate was told that he must be contented with the event which God had been pleased to send.‡

* FOXE, vol. vii.

† FOXE.

‡ Noailles to the King of France, April 5 and April 17.

Montmorency to Noailles, April 21. Noailles to Montmorency, April 30: Ambassades, vol. iv.

An opportunity, however, seemed to offer itself to him of accomplishing a service to Europe.

For thirty-five years the two great Catholic powers had been wrestling with but brief interruption. The advantage to either had been as trifling as the causes of their quarrel were insignificant. Their revenues were anticipated, their credit was exhausted, yet year after year languid armies struggled into collision. Across the Alps in Italy, and along the frontiers of Burgundy and the Low Countries, towns and villages and homesteads were annually sacked, and peasants and their families destroyed—for what it were vain to ask, except it was for some poor shadow of imagined honour. Two mighty princes believed themselves justified in the sight of Heaven in squandering their subjects' treasure and their subjects' blood, because the pride of each forbade him to be the first in volunteering insignificant concessions. France had conquered Savoy and part of Piedmont, and had pushed forward its northern frontier to Marienbourg and Metz: the Emperor held Lombardy, Parma, and Naples, and Navarre was annexed to Spain. The quarrel might have easily been ended by mutual restitution; yet the Peace of Cambray, the Treaty of Nice, and the Peace of Crêpy, lasted only while the combatants were taking breath; and those who would attribute the extravagances of human folly to supernatural influence might imagine that the great discord between the orthodox powers had been permitted to give time for the Reformation to strike its roots into the soil of

CH. 33.

A.D. 1555.

April.

Prospect of peace between France and
the Empire,

CH. 33. Europe. But a war which could be carried on only by loans at sixteen per cent. was necessarily near its conclusion. The apparent recovery of England to the Church revived hopes which the Peace of Passau and the dissolution of the Council of Trent had almost extinguished; and, could a reconciliation be effected at last, and could Philip obtain the disposal of the military strength of England in the interests of the Papacy, it might not even yet be too late to lay the yoke of orthodoxy on the Germans, and, in a Catholic interpretation of the Parable of the Supper, 'compel them to come in.'

A.D. 1555.
April.

As a preliminary to a crusade in Germany.

France is willing to listen to terms, expecting that on the birth of Mary's child England will otherwise take part in the war.

Mary, who had heard herself compared to the Virgin, and Pole, who imagined the Prince of Spain to be the counterpart of the Redeemer of mankind, indulged their fancy in large expectations. Philip was the Solomon who was to raise up the temple of the Lord, which the Emperor, who was a man of war, had not been allowed to build: and Francis, at the same time, was not unwilling to listen to proposals. The birth of Mary's child was expected in a few weeks, when England would, as a matter of course, become more decisively Imperialist, and Henry, whose invasion of the Netherlands had failed in the previous summer, was ready now to close the struggle while it could be ended on equal and honourable terms.

A conference is to be held in the Calais Pale.

A conference was, therefore, agreed upon, in which England was to mediate. A village in the Calais Pale was selected as the place of assembly, and Pole, Gardiner, Paget, and Pembroke were chosen to arrange the terms of a general peace, with the Bishop of Arras, the Cardinal of Lorraine, and Montmorency. The time pitched upon was that at which, so near as the queen could judge, she would herself bring into the world the offspring which was to be the hope of England and mankind; and the great event should, if possible, precede the first meeting of the plenipotentiaries.

CH. 33.
A.D. 1553.
April.

The queen herself commenced her preparations with infinite earnestness, and, as a preliminary votive offering, she resolved to give back to the Church such of the abbey property as remained in the hands of the crown. Her debts were now as high as ever. The Flanders correspondence was repeating the heavy story of loans and bills. Promises to pay were falling due, and there were no resources to meet them, and the Israelite leeches were again fastened on the commonwealth.* Nevertheless, the sacrifice should be made; the more difficult it was, the more favourably it would be received; and, on the 28th of March, she sent for the Lord Treasurer, and announced her intention. 'If he told her that her estate would not bear it, she must reply,' she said, 'that she valued the salvation of her soul beyond all earthly things.† As soon as parliament could meet and give its sanction, she would restore the firstfruits also to the Holy See. She must work for God as God had worked for her.

The queen prepares her confinement.

She presents her votive offerings,

* Letters to and from Sir Thomas Gresham: MS. Flanders, Mary, State Paper Office.

† STRYPE's Memorials.

CH. 33.
 A.D. 1555.
 April.
 And retires
 to Hampton Court.

Circulars
 are prepared and signed, announcing
 the birth of a prince.

The pains
 are supposed to have commenced.
 The bells
 ring. The priests sing
Te Deum.

About the 20th of April she withdrew to Hampton Court for entire quiet. The rockers and the nurses were in readiness, and a cradle stood open to receive the royal infant. Priests and bishops sang Litanies through the London streets; a procession of ecclesiastics in cloth of gold and tissue, marched round Hampton Court Palace, headed by Philip in person; Gardiner walked at his side, while Mary gazed from a window.* Not only was the child assuredly coming, but its sex was decided on, and circulars were drawn and signed both by the king and queen, with blanks only for the month and day, announcing to ministers of state, to ambassadors, and to foreign sovereigns, the birth of a prince.†

On the 30th, the happy moment was supposed to have arrived; a message was sent off to London, announcing the commencement of the pains.

* MACHYN'S Diary.

† These curious records of disappointed expectations remain in large numbers in the State Paper Office. The following is the letter addressed to Pole:—

Philip.—Mary the Queen.

Most Reverend Father in God, our right trusty and rightentirely beloved cousin, We greet you well: And whereas it hath pleased Almighty God, of His infinite goodness, to add unto the great number of other His benefits bestowed upon us, the gladding of us with the happy deliverance of a prince, for the which we do most humbly thank Him;

knowing your affections to be such towards us as whatsoever shall fortunately succeed unto us, the same cannot be but acceptable unto you also; We have thought good to communicate unto you these happy news of ours, to the intent you may rejoice with us; and praying for us, give God thanks for this his work accordingly. Given under our signet, at our house of Hampton Court, the — of —, the 1st and 2nd year of our and my Lord the King's reign.—MS. Mary, Domestic, vol. v. State Paper Office.

The bells were set ringing in all the churches; Te Deum was sung in St. Paul's; priests wrote sermons; bonfires were piled ready for lighting, and tables were laid out in the streets.* The news crossed the Channel to Antwerp, and had grown in the transit. The great bell of the cathedral was rung for the actual birth. The vessels in the river fired salutes. 'The regent sent the English mariners a hundred crowns to drink,' and, 'they made themselves in readiness to show some worthy triumph upon the waters.'†

CH. 33.

A.D. 1555.
April.

But the pains passed off without result; and whispers began to be heard, that there was, perhaps, a mistake of a more considerable kind. Mary, however, had no sort of misgiving. She assured her attendants that all was well, and that she felt the motion of her child. The physicians professed to be satisfied, and the priests were kept at work at the Litanies. Up and down the streets they marched, through City and suburb, park and square; torches flared along Cheapside at midnight behind the Holy Sacrament, and five hundred poor men and women from the almshouses, walked two and two, telling their beads in their withered fingers: then all the boys of all the schools were set in motion, and the ushers and the masters came after them; clerks, canons, bishops, mayor, aldermen, officers of guilds.‡ Such marching, such chanting, such praying was never seen or heard before or since in London

But the symptoms pass off again. But the queen protests that she feels her child, and the priests pray, and processions walk day and night in the streets.

* Noailles to Montmorency, Council: MS. Flanders, Mary, April 30: Ambassades, vol. iv. State Paper Office.

† Sir Thomas Gresham to the ‡ MACHYN'S Diary.

CH. 33. streets. A profane person ran one day out
 A.D. 1555. of the crowd, and hung about a priest's neck,
 May. where the beads should be, a string of puddings;
 but they whipped him, and prayed on. Surely,
 God would hear the cry of his people.

The new Pope dies,
 and Pole
 offers himself a third
 time;

In the midst of the suspense the Papal chair
 fell vacant again. The Pontificate of Marcellus lasted three weeks, and Pole a third time offered himself to the suffrages of the cardinals. The courts were profuse of compliments as before.
 Noailles presented him with a note from Montmorency, containing assurances of the infinite desire of the King of France for the success of so holy a person.* Philip wrote to Rome in his behalf, and Mary condescended to ask for the support of the French cardinals.† But
 the fair speeches, as before, were but trifling.
 The choice fell on Pole's personal enemy, Cardinal Caraffa, who was French alike in heart
 and brain.

But the cardinals
 choose Ca-raffa, his greatest enemy.

The child
 will not be born, and
 the conferences at Calais are without result;

The choice of a Pope, however, would signify little, if only the child could be born; but where was the child? The queen put it off strangely.
 The Conference could be delayed no longer. It opened without the intended makeweight, and the Court of France was less inclined to make concessions for a peace. The delay began to tell on the Bourse at Antwerp. The Fuggers and the Schertzes drew their purse-strings, and made difficulties in lending more money to the Em-

* Noailles to Montmorency, May 15: Ambassades, vol. iv.

† Philip and Mary to Gardiner, Arundel, and Paget: BURNET'S Collectanea.

peror.* The plenipotentiaries had to separate after a few meetings, having effected nothing, to the especial mortification of Philip and Mary, who looked to the pacification to enable them to cure England of its unruly humours. The Duke of Alva (so rumour insisted) was to bring across the Spanish troops which were in the Low Countries, take possession of London, and force the parliament into submission.† The English were to be punished, for the infinite insolences in which they had indulged towards Philip's retinue, by being compelled, whether they liked it or not, to bestow upon him the crown.‡

CH. 33.

A.D. 1555.

May.

And until peace is made, the queen and Philip cannot execute certain designs which they have in view for the better settlement of England.

But the peace could not be, nor could the child be born; and the impression grew daily that the queen had not been pregnant at all. Mary herself, who had been borne forward to this, the crisis of her fortunes, on a tide of success, now suddenly found her exulting hopes closing over. From confidence she fell into anxiety, from anxiety into fear, from fear into wildness and despondency.

Mary becomes anxious at the delay in the birth of the child.

* NOAILLES : Ambassades, vol. iv. p. 313.

† 'Et là où ladicte paix ou trefve adviendront ledict seigneur (l'Empereur) fera bientort apres repasser en ce royaum le duc d'Alva avecque la plus grande part de sesdictes forces pour y fabvoriser les affaires de ce roy.' —NOAILLES, vol. iv. p. 330.

‡ 'Il n'est rien que l'Empereur ne fasse pour venir à la paix, tant il desire avant de retourner en Espagne de faire couronner son filz, roy de ce pays. Et pensera par même moyen se saisir des places fortes d'icelluy et chastier des Angloys d'infinies injures qu'ilz ont faict recepvoir aux Espagnols, mettant grosses garnisons en ceste ville de Londres, et aultres lieux, à quoy ces roy et royne proposent. . . . s'y faire obeir absolument aux parlemens, suyvant ce qu'ilz n'ont peu faire par cydevant'. — Ibid. p. 332, 333.

In these reports the truth was anticipated but not exceeded. It will be seen that such projects were really formed at a later period.

CH. 33. She vowed that with the restoration of the
 A.D. 1555. estates, she would rebuild the abbeyes at her own
 May. cost. In vain. Her women now understood her condition; she was sick of a mortal disease;
 but they durst not tell her; and she whose career
 had been painted out to her by the legate, as especial and supernatural, looked only for supernatural causes of her present state. Throughout May she remained in her apartments waiting—waiting—in passionate restlessness. With stomach swollen, and features shrunk and haggard, she would sit upon the floor, with her knees drawn up to her face, in an agony of doubt; and in mockery of her wretchedness, letters were again strewed about the place by an invisible
 agency, telling her that she was loathed by her people. She imagined they would rise again in her defence. But if they rose again, it would be to drive her and her husband from the country.*

She fears
 that she
 has been remiss in
 her duties,

After the mysterious quickening on the legate's salutation, she could not doubt that her hopes had been at one time well founded; but for some fault, some error in herself, God had delayed the fulfilment of His promise. And what could that crime be? The accursed thing was still in the realm. She had been raised up, like the judges in Israel, for the extermination of God's enemies;
 and she had smitten but a few here and there,

* 'Ladicte dame plusieurs fois
 de le jour demoure longtemps
 assise à terre, les genoulx aussy
 haultz que la teste.

'Se trouva hier fort malade

et plus que de coustume, et pour la soulager, fust trouvé à mesme
 heure en sa court plusieurs lettres
 semées contre son honneur,' &c.

NOAILLES, vol. iv. p. 342.

when, like the evil spirits, their name was legion.* She had before sent orders round among the magistrates, to have their eyes upon them. On the 24th of May, when her distraction was at its height, she wrote a circular to quicken the over-languid zeal of the bishops.

CH. 33.
A.D. 1555.
May.

‘Right Reverend Father in God,’ it ran, ‘We greet you well; and where of late we addressed our letters unto the justices of the peace, within every of the counties within this our realm, whereby, amongst other good instructions given therein for the good order of the country about, they are willed to have special regard to such disordered persons as, forgetting their duty to Almighty God and us, do lean to any erroneous and heretical opinions; whom, if they cannot, by good admonition and fair means reform, they are willed to deliver unto the ordinary, to be by him charitably travelled withal, and removed, if it may be, from their naughty opinions; or else, if they continue obstinate, to be ordered according to the laws provided in that behalf: understanding now, to our no little marvel, that divers of the said misordered persons, being, by the justices of the peace, for their contempt and obstinacy, brought to the ordinary, to be used as is aforesaid, are either refused to be received at their hands, or, if they be received, are neither so travelled with as Christian charity requireth, nor yet proceeded withal according to the order of justice, but are

And she
stirs the bishops
to move faster with
the persecution.

* ‘The queen said she could not be safely and happily delivered, nor could anything succeed prosperously with her, unless all the heretics in prison were burnt ad unum.’—BURNET.

CH. 33. suffered to continue in their errors, to the dishonour of Almighty God, and dangerous example
 of others; like as we find this matter very strange,
 so have we thought convenient both to signify
 this our knowledge, and therewithal also to admonish you to have in this behalf such regard henceforth unto the office of a good pastor and bishop,
 as where any such offenders shall be, by the said
 justices of the peace, brought unto you, ye do use your good wisdom and discretion in procuring to remove them from their errors if it may be, or else in proceeding against them, if they continue obstinate, according to the order of the laws, so as, through your good furtherance, both God's glory may be the better advanced, and the commonwealth more quietly governed.*

Fifty persons are put
 to death in the dioceses
 of London,
 Rochester,
 and Canter-
 bury.

Under the fresh impulse of this letter, fifty persons were put to death at the stake in the three ensuing months,—in the diocese of London, under Bonner; in the diocese of Rochester,
 under Maurice Griffin; in the diocese of Canterbury, where Pole, the archbishop designate, so soon as Cranmer should be despatched, governed
 through Harpsfeld, the archdeacon, and Thornton,
 the suffragan bishop of Dover. Of these sacrifices,
 which were distinguished all of them by a uniformity of quiet heroism in the sufferers, that of Cardmaker, prebendary of Wells, calls most for notice.

* BURNET'S Collectanea.
 This letter is addressed to Bonner, and was taken from Bonner's
Register; but, from the form,
 it was evidently a circular. The Bishop of London had not deserved to be singled out to be especially admonished for want of energy.

The people, whom the cruelty of the Catholic party was re-converting to the Reformation with a rapidity like that produced by the gift of tongues on the day of Pentecost, looked on the martyrs as soldiers are looked at who are called to accomplish, with the sacrifice of their lives, some great service for their country. Cardmaker, on his first examination, had turned his back and flinched. But the consciousness of shame, and the example of others, gave him back his courage; he was called up again under the queen's mandate, condemned, and brought out on the 30th of May, to suffer at Smithfield, with an upholsterer named Warne. The sheriffs produced the pardons. Warne, without looking at them, undressed at once, and went to the stake; Cardmaker 'remained long talking;' 'the people in a marvellous dump of sadness, thinking he would recant.' He turned away at last, and knelt, and prayed; but he had still his clothes on; 'there was no semblance of burning;' and the crowd continued nervously agitated, till he rose and threw off his cloak. 'Then, seeing this, contrary to their fearful expectations, as men delivered out of great doubt, they cried out for joy, with so great a shout as hath not been lightly heard a greater. God be praised; the Lord strengthen thee, Cardmaker. The Lord Jesus receive thy spirit.*' Every martyr's trial was a battle; every constant death was a defeat of the common enemy; and the instinctive con-

CH. 33.

A.D. 1555.
May.

Card-
maker, who had flinch-
ed on his
first trial,
is brought
to Smith-
field,

And seems to hesitate
when the pardon is offered ;
but he collects himself, and
dies.

* FOXE, vol. vii.

CH. 33. sciousness that truth was asserting itself in suffering, converted the natural emotion of horror into admiring pride.

A.D. 1555.
June.

But for all this, the child cannot any more be born.

Yet, for the great purpose of the court, the burnt-offerings were ineffectual as the prayers of the priests. The queen was allowed to persuade herself that she had mistaken her time by two months; and to this hope she clung herself, so long as the hope could last: but among all other persons concerned, scarcely one was any longer under a delusion; and the clear-eyed Renard lost no time in laying the position of affairs before his master.

The marriage of Elizabeth and Philibert had hung fire, from the invincible unwillingness on the part of Mary to pardon or in any way recognise her sister;* and as long as there was a hope of a child, she had not perhaps been pressed about it: but it was now absolutely necessary to do something, and violent measures towards the princess were more impossible than ever.

Renard sends his opinion to the Emperor of the queen's condition, and the prospects of the country.

'The entire future,' wrote Renard to the Emperor, on the 27th of June, 'turns on the accouchement of the queen; of which, however, there are no signs. If all goes well, the state of feeling in the country will improve. If she is in error, I foresee convulsions and disturbances such as no pen can describe. The succession to the crown is so unfortunately hampered, that it must fall to Elizabeth, and with Elizabeth there will be a religious revolution. The clergy will be put down, the Catholics persecuted, and there will be such revenge for the present proceedings as the world has never seen. I know not whether the king's person is safe; and the scandals and calumnies which the heretics are spreading about the queen are beyond conception. Some say that she has never been enceinte; some repeat that there will be a supposititious child, and that there would have been less delay could a child have been found that would answer the purpose.* The looks of men are grown strange and impenetrable; those in whose loyalty I had most dependence I have now most reason to doubt. Nothing is certain, and I am more bewildered than ever at the things which I see going on around me. There is neither government, nor justice, nor order; nothing but audacity and malice.†

* A letter of Mary's to Philip on the subject will be given in the following chapter, which reveals the disagreement which had arisen between them about this marriage.

The faint hopes which Renard expressed speedily vanished, and every one but the queen herself not only knew that she had no child at present, but that she never could have a child—that her days were numbered, and that if the Spaniards intended to secure the throne they

CH. 33.

A.D. 1555.
June,

The queen's condition becomes known to the country.

* The impression was very generally spread. Noailles mentions it, writing on the 20th of June to the King of France; and Foxe mentions a mysterious attempt of Lord North to obtain a new-born child from its mother, as having happened within his own knowledge. The existence of the belief, however, proves nothing. At such a time it was inevitable, nor was there any good evidence to connect Lord North, supposing Foxe's story true, with the court. The risk of discovery would have been great, the consequences terrible, and few people have been more incapable than Mary of knowingly doing a wrong thing.

† Renard to the Emperor, June 27: Granvelle Papers, vol. vi.

CH. 33.

A.D. 1555.
June.

Philip resolves to make use of Elizabeth.

must obtain it by other means than the order of inheritance. Could the war be brought to an end, Mary might live long enough to give her husband an opportunity of attempting violence; but of peace there was no immediate prospect, and it remained for the present to make the most of Elizabeth. Setting her marriage aside, it was doubtful whether the people would permit her longer confinement after the queen's disappointment; and, willingly or unwillingly, Mary must be forced to receive her at court again.

The princess was still at Woodstock, where she had remained for a year, under the harsh surveillance of Sir Henry Bedingfield. Lord William Howard's visit may have consoled her with the knowledge that she was not forgotten by the nobility; but her health had suffered from her long imprisonment, and the first symptom of an approaching change in her position was the appearance of the queen's physician to take charge of her.

A fresh effort is made to induce her to confess herself guilty, under promise of pardon;

A last effort was made to betray her into an acknowledgment of guilt. 'A secret friend' entreated her to 'submit herself to the queen's mercy.' Elizabeth saw the snare. She would not ask for mercy, she said, where she had committed no offence; if she was guilty, she desired justice, not mercy; and she knew well she would have found none, could evidence have been found against her: but she thanked God she was in no danger of being proved guilty; she wished she was as safe from secret enemies.

But the plots for despatching her, if they had ever existed, were laid aside; she was informed that her presence was required at Hampton Court. The rumour of her intended release spread abroad, and sixty gentlemen, who had once belonged to her suite, met her on the way at Colebrook, in the hope that they might return to their attendance: but their coming was premature; she was still treated as a prisoner, and they were ordered off in the queen's name.

CH. 33.

A.D. 1555.

July.

But the attempt fails, and she is sent for to the Court,

On her arrival at Hampton Court, however, the princess felt that she had recovered her freedom. She was received by Lord William Howard. The courtiers hurried to her with their congratulations, and Howard dared and provoked the resentment of the king and queen by making them kneel, and kiss her hand.* Mary could not bring herself at first to endure an interview. The Bishop of Winchester came to her on the queen's behalf, to repeat the advice which had been given to her at Woodstock, and to promise pardon if she would ask for it.

Where she is received by Lord William Howard with the honours of her rank.

Elizabeth had been resolute when she was alone and friendless, she was not more yielding now. She repeated that she had committed no offence, and therefore required no forgiveness;

She is again required, in vain, to make her submission.

* Joanna of Castille, the Emperor's mad mother, dying soon after, masses were said for her with some solemnity at St. Paul's. 'Aux obsèques que la royne commanda estre faicte à Londres, L'admiral d'Angleterre démontra ouvertement avoir quelque ressentment, de ce qu'il disoit le roy ne luy faisoit si bonne chiere et demonstration si favorable qu'il avoit accoustumé, disant qu'il sçavoit bien pourquoy s'estoit, inferant que ce fust pour ce qu'il avoit faict baiser les mains de Elizabetz aux gentilhommes qui l'avoient visitez.'

CH. 33. she had rather lie in prison all her life, than confess when there was nothing to be confessed.

A.D. 1555.
July.

The answer was carried to Mary, and the day after the bishop came again. 'The queen marvelled,' he said, 'that she would so stoutly stand to her innocence;' if she called herself innocent, she implied that she had been 'unjustly imprisoned;' if she expected her liberty 'she must tell another tale.'

But the causes which had compelled the court to send for her, forbade them equally to persist in an impotent persecution. They had desired only to tempt her into admissions which they could plead in justification for past or future severities. They had failed, and they gave way.

She is sent for to the
queen,

A week later, on an evening in the beginning of July, Lady Clarence, Mary's favourite attendant, brought a message, that the queen was expecting her sister in her room. The Princess was led across the garden in the dusk, and introduced by a back staircase into the royal apartments. Almost two years had elapsed since the sisters had last met, when Mary hid the hatred which was in her heart behind a veil of kindness. There was no improvement of feeling, but the necessity of circumstances compelled the form of reconciliation.

Elizabeth dropped on her knees. 'God preserve your Majesty,' she said; 'you will find me as true a subject to your Majesty as any; whatever has been reported of me, you shall not find it otherwise.'

'You will not confess,' the queen said; 'you stand to your truth: I pray God it may so fall out.' CH. 33.

'If it does not,' said Elizabeth, 'I desire neither favour nor pardon at your hands.'

A.D. 1555.

July.

To whom she again
protests her innocence.

'Well,' Mary bitterly answered, 'you persevere in your truth stiffly; belike you will not confess that you have been wrongfully punished?'

'I must not say so, your Majesty,' Elizabeth replied.

'Belike you will to others?' said the queen.

'No, please your Majesty,' answered the princess. 'I have borne the burden, and I must bear it. I pray your Majesty to have a good opinion of me, and to think me your true subject, not only from the beginning but while life lasteth.'

The queen did not answer, she muttered only in Spanish, 'Sabe Dios,' 'God knows;' and Elizabeth withdrew.*

It was said that during the interview, Philip was concealed behind a curtain, anxious for a sight of the captive damsel whose favour with the people was such a perplexity to him. Philip is said to have witnessed the interview.

At this time, Elizabeth was beautiful; her haughty features were softened by misfortune; and as it is certain that Philip, when he left England, gave special directions for her good treatment, so it is possible that he may have envied the fortune which he intended for the Prince of Savoy; and the scheme which he afterwards attempted to execute, of making her his own wife on the queen's death, may have then

CH. 33. suggested itself to him as a solution of the English difficulty. The magnificent girl, who was already the idol of the country, must have presented an emphatic contrast with the lean, childless, haggard, forlorn Mary; and he may easily have allowed his fancy to play with a pleasant temptation. If it was so, Philip was far too careless of the queen's feelings to conceal his own. If it was not so, the queen's haunting consciousness of her unattractiveness must have been aggravated by the disappointment of her hopes, and she may have tortured herself with jealousy and suspicion.

The queen cannot conquer her dislike. Elizabeth is set free, however, and returns to her own house.

At all events, Mary could not overcome her aversion. Elizabeth was set at liberty, but she was not allowed to remain at the court. She returned to Ashridge, even there, to be pursued with petty annoyances. Her first step when she was again at home was to send for her friend Mrs. Ashley; the queen instantly committed Mrs. Ashley to the Fleet, and sent three other officers of her sister's household to the Tower; while a number of gentlemen suspected of being her adherents, who had remained in London beyond their usual time of leaving for the country, were ordered imperiously to their estates.*

But neither impatience nor violence could con-

* Le dict conseil voyant que plusieurs gentilhommes s'assembloient à Londres, et communicuoient par ensemble, qu'ils se tenoient à Londres, contre ce qu'est accoustumé en Angleterre, qu'est que ceulx qu'ilz eu

moien ne demeurent à Londres en l'esté, ains au pays, pour la chaleur et maladies ordinaires qu'ilz y reignent, et que toutes les dicts gentilhommes sont heretiques, ains esté pour le plus part rebelles, les autres parens et ad-

ceal the fatal change which had passed over CH. 33.
 Mary's prospects. Not till the end of July A.D. 1555.
 could she part finally from her hopes. Then, at July.
 last, the glittering dream was lost for the waking truth; then at once from the imagination of herself as the virgin bride who was to bear a child
 for the recovery of a lost world, she was precipitated into the poor certainty that she was a Mary at length learns her condition,
and Philip prepares to leave her.
 blighted and a dying woman. Sorrow was heaped on sorrow; Philip would stay with her no longer. His presence was required on the Continent, where his father was about to anticipate the death which he knew to be near, and, after forty years of battling with the stormy waters,
 to collect himself for the last great change in the calm of a monastery in Spain.

It was no new intention. For years the Em- Charles V. intends to abdicate,
Philip's
presence in England
having ceased to be necessary.
 peror had been in the habit of snatching intervals
 of retreat; for years he had made up his mind to relinquish at some time the labours of life before relinquishing life itself. The vanities of sovereignty had never any particular charm for Charles V.; he was not a man who cared 'to monarchize and kill with looks,' or who could feel a pang at parting with the bauble of a crown;
 and when the wise world cried out in their surprise, and strained their fancies for the cause of conduct which seemed so strange to them, they for-

hérens de Elizabetz, leur a faict | en pretendant qu'ilz estoient
 faire commandement de se re- | gens de bien, qu'ilz n'estoient
 tirer chascun en sa maison et se | traistres. — Renard to the Em-
 separer; qu'ilz ont prins mal et | peror: Granvelle Papers, vol. iv.
 en ont fait grandes doleances,

CH. 33. got that princes who reign to labour, grow weary
like the peasant of the burden of daily toil.

A.D. 1555.
July.

Many influences combined to induce Charles to delay no longer in putting his resolution in effect.

The Cortes were growing impatient at the prolonged absence both of himself and Philip, and the presence of the Emperor, although in retirement, would give pleasure to the Spanish people. His health was so shattered, that each winter had been long expected to be his last; and although he would not flinch from work as long as he was required at his post, there was nothing to detain Philip any more in England, unless, or until, the succession could be placed on another footing. To continue there the husband of a childless queen, with authority limited to a form, and with no recognised interest beyond the term of his wife's life, was no becoming position for the heir of the throne of Spain, of Naples, the Indies, and the Low Countries.

August.

Philip was therefore now going. He concealed his intention till it was betrayed by the departure of one Spanish nobleman after another. The queen became nervous and agitated, and at last he was forced to avow part of the truth. He told her that his father wanted to see him, but that his absence would not be extended beyond a fortnight or three weeks; she should go with him to Dover, and, if she desired, she could wait there for his return.* Her consent was obtained by the mild deceit, and it was considered

He deceives
the queen
into a belief that he will immediately return.

* NOAILLES, vol. v. pp. 77-82.

afterwards that the journey to Dover might be too much for her, and the parting might take place at Greenwich.

CH. 33.

A.D. 1555.
August.

On the 3rd of August, the king and queen removed for a few days from Hampton Court to Oatlands; on the way Mary received consolation from a poor man who met her on crutches, and was cured of his lameness by looking on her.*

On the 26th, the royal party came down the river in their barge, attended by the legate; they dined at Westminster on their way to Greenwich, and as rumour had said that Mary was dead, she was carried through the city in an open litter, with the king and the cardinal at her side. To please Philip, or to please the people, Elizabeth was invited to the court before the king's departure; but she was sent by water to prevent a demonstration, while the archers of the guard, who attended on the queen, were in corslet and morion.†

The king
and queen
leave Hampton Court for Greenwich.

On the 28th, Philip went. Parliament was to sit again in October. It would then be seen whether anything more could be done about the succession. On the consent or refusal of the legislature his future measures would depend. To the queen he left particular instructions, which he afterwards repeated in writing, to show favour to Elizabeth; and doubting how far he could rely upon Mary, he gave a similar charge to such of his own suite as he left behind him.‡ Could he obtain

Philip
leaves directions for the good treatment
of Elizabeth, and departs.

* MACHYN'S Diary.

† NOAILLES, vol. v. pp. 98, 99, 123.

‡ Elle a bonne part en la

grace dudict Seigneur Roy, lequel par plusieurs lettres qu'il escript à la royne sa femme la luy recommande, comme aussy il a

CH. 33. it, he would take the Princess's crown for himself; should he fail, he might marry her; or
 A.D. 1555.
 September. should this too be impossible, he would win her gratitude, and support her title against the dangerous competition of the Queen of Scots and Dauphiness of France.

On these terms the pair who had been brought together with so much difficulty separated after a little more than a year. The cardinal composed a passionate prayer for the queen's use during her husband's absence.* It is to be hoped that she was spared the sight of a packet of letters soon after intercepted by the French, in which faitc particulièrement et par soubz main aux principaux seigneurs Espagnolz qui sont demourez en ce lieu. — Ibid., p. 127.

* Domine Jesu Christe, qui es verus sponsus animæ meæ, verus Rex ac Dominus meus qui me ad Regni hujus gubernacula singulari tuâ providentiâ ac benignitate vocatam cum antea essem derelicta et tanquam mulier ab adolescentiâ abjecta, eum virum in matrimonium et regni societatem expetere voluisti, qui plus ceteris imaginem tuam quam in sanctitate et justitiâ mundo ostendisti in suis meisque actionibus dirigendis exprimeret, et expetiturum dedisti, cujus nunc discessum mœrens defleo—quæso per illum pretiosissimum sanguinem quem pro me sponsâ tuâ proque illo et omnibus in arâ crucis effudisti, ut hunc meum dolorem ita lenias, ita purges, ita temperes, ut quoties ille sanctis suis consiliis mihi adest, quoties per litteras quæ ad salutem hujus populi tui pertinent commendat, toties illum præsentem esse, teque unicum consolatorem in medio nostro adesse sentiam, utque in illo te semper amem atque glorificem. Obsecro, Domine, ut in nobis tua imago sic indies per tuam gratiam renovetur in conspectu populi tui, quem nobis gubernandum commisisti, ut cum is justitiæ tuæ severitatem, in iis quæ amiserat dum hi regnarent qui a rectâ fide declinantes sanctitatem et justitiam expulerunt, jam pridem senserit, quæ nunc per tuam misericordiam recuperaverit sub illorum Regno quos nunquam a rectâ fide declinare es passus, cum gratiarum actione lætus intelligat ut uno ore tam nos quam populus noster Deum patrem per te ejus unicum filium in unitate Spiritûs glorificemus, ad nostram ipsorum et piorum omnium salutem et consolationem. Amen. — Epist. REG. POL. vol. v.

her husband and her husband's countrymen expressed their opinions of the marriage and its consequences.* The truth, however, became known in England, although in a form under which the queen could turn from it as calumny.

CH. 33.

A.D. 1555.
September.
Philip does not look with pleasure on his English marriage.

Before the meeting of parliament, a letter was published, addressed to the Lords of the Council, by a certain John Bradford.† The writer accounted for his knowledge of the secrets which he had to tell, by saying that he had lived in the household of one of the Spanish noblemen who were in attendance on Philip; that he had learnt the language unknown to his master, and had thus overheard unguarded conversations. He had read letters addressed to Philip, and letters written by him and by his confidential friends; and he was able to say, as a thing heard with his own ears, and seen with his own eyes, that the 'Spaniards minded nothing less than the subversion of the English commonwealth.' In fact, he repeated the rumours of the summer, only more circumstantially, and

John Bradford betrays the intentions of the Spaniards,

* Il me faudroit faire ung merueilleux discours pour vous rendre compte de tous les propos qui font dans les dictes lettres. Je vous diray seulement ce qui plus toudche et regarde le lieu où vous estes. Et premierement la royne a tant enchanté et ensorcelé ce beau jeune prince son mary que de luy avoir faict croire ung an entier qu'elle estoit grosse pour le retenir pres d'elle, dont il se trouve à present si confus et fasché qu'il n'a plus deliberé de retourner habiter ceste terre, promettant à tous ses serviteurs que s'il peult estre une fois en Espagne qu'il n'en sortira plus à si mauvaïse occasion, &c. . . .— Le Protonotaire de Noailles à M. de Noailles: Ambassades, vol. v. p. 136.

† Not the martyr; he had been despatched by Bonner among the victims of the summer; but a person otherwise unknown.

CH. 33.

A.D. 1555.
September.
And their conspiracies
against English
liberty.

with fuller details. Under pretence of improving the fortifications, Philip intended to obtain command of the principal harbours and ports; he would lay cannon on the land side, and gradually bring in Spanish troops, the queen playing into his hands; and as soon as peace could be made with France, he would have the command of the fleet and the sea, and could do what he pleased.*

‘I saw,’ the writer continued, ‘letters sent from the Emperor, wherein was contained these privities,—that the king should make his excuse to the queen that he would go to see his father in Flanders, and that immediately he would return—seeing the good simple queen is so jealous over my son. (I term it,’ said Bradford, ‘as the letter doth.)’ ‘We’ said the Emperor, ‘shall make her agree unto all our requests before his return, or else keep him exercised in our affairs till we may prevail with the council, who, doubtless, will be won with fair promises and great gifts, politicly placed in time.’ In other letters I have read the cause disputed, that the queen is bound by the laws of God to endue her husband in all her goods and possessions, so far as in her lieth; and they think she will do it indeed to the uttermost of her

* ‘Ye will say, How could this fellow know their counsel?—I was chamberlain to one of the privy council, and with all diligence gave myself to write and read Spanish, which thing once obtained I kept secret from my master and my fellow-servants,

because I might be trusted in my master’s closet or study, where I might read such writing as I saw daily brought into the council chamber.’—John Bradford to the Lords of the Council: STYRE’S Memorials of the Reformation.

power. No man can think evil of the queen, though she be somewhat moved when such things are beaten into her head with gentlemen; but whether the crown belongs to the queen or the realm, the Spaniards know not, nor care not, though the queen, to her damnation, disherit the right heir apparent, or break her father's entail, made by the whole consent of the realm, which neither she nor the realm can justly alter.*

CH. 33.

A.D. 1555.
September.

* Elizabeth, when she came to the throne, refused to admit that she was under any real obligation to Philip. She was entirely right in her refusal. The Spaniards had sworn, if possible, to make away 'with all those which by any means might lay claim to the crown.'

'I call God to record,' Bradford continues, 'I have heard it with mine ears, and seen the said persons with mine eyes, that have said, if ever the king obtain the crown, he would make the Lady Elizabeth safe from ever coming to the same, or any of our cursed nation. For they say, that if they can find the means to keep England in subjection, they would do more with the land than with all the rest of his kingdoms. I speak not of any fool's communication, but of the wisest, and that no mean persons. Yea, and they trust that there shall means be found before that time to despatch the Lady Elizabeth well enough by the help of assured traitors, as they have already in England plenty, and then they may the more easier destroy the others when she is rid out of the way.

'I speak not this, as some men would take it, to move dissension; for that were the best way for the Spaniards to come to their prey. Such a time they look for, and such a time they say some nobleman hath promised to provide for them.

'God is my witness that my heart will not suffer me for very shame to declare such vile reports as I have heard them speak against the queen, and yet her Grace taketh them for her faithful friends. The Spaniards say, that if they obtain not the crown, they may curse the time that ever the king was married to a wife so unmeet for him by natural course of years; but and if that may be brought to pass that was meant in marriage-making, they shall keep old rich robes for high festival days.

'Alas, for pity! Ye be yet in such good estate that ye may, without loss of any man's life, keep the crown and realm quietly. If ye will hear a fool's counsel,

CH. 33.

A.D. 1555.
September.The queen
hears bad
news of her husband's misdoings
abroad.

Struggle as the queen might against such a representation of her husband's feelings towards her, it was true that he had left her with a promise to return; and the weeks went, and he did not come, and no longer spoke of coming. The abdication of the Emperor would keep him from her, at least, till the end of the winter. And news came soon which was harder still to bear; news, that he, whom she had been taught to regard as made in the image of the Saviour,* was unfaithful to his marriage vows.† Bradford had spoken generally of the king's vulgar amours; other accounts convinced her too surely that he was consoling himself for his long purgatory in England, by miscellaneous licentiousness. Philip was gross alike in all his appetites; bacon fat was the favourite food with which he gorged himself to illness;‡ his intrigues were on the same level of indelicacy, and his unhappy wife was forced keep still the crown to the right succession in your hands, and give it to no foreign princes. Peradventure her Grace thinketh the king will keep her the more company and love her the better, if she give him the crown. Ye will crown him to make him chaste contrary to his nature. They have a saying — 'The baker's daughter is better in her gown than Queen Mary without the crown.' They say, 'Old wives must be cherished for their young fair gifts.' 'Old wives,' they say, 'for fair words will give all that they have.' But how be they used afterwards? Doth the queen think the king will remain in England with giving him the realm? The council of Spain purposeth to establish other matters; to appoint in England a viceroy with a great army of Spanish soldiers, and let the queen live at her beads like a good antient lady.'— John Bradford to the Earls of Arundel, Shrewsbury, Derby, and Pembroke: STYKE'S Memorials, vol. vi. p. 340, &c.

* Prayer written by Cardinal Pole for Queen Mary: supra.

† Noailles to the King of France, October 21: Ambassades, vol. v.

‡ Noailles to Montmorency, December 5: Ibid.

to know that he preferred the society of abandoned women of the lowest class to hers. CH. 33.

The French ambassador describes her as distracted with wretchedness, speaking to no one except the legate. The legate was her only comfort; the legate and the thing which she called religion.

A.D. 1555.
October.
She sinks despondingly into gloomy bigotry.

Deep in the hearts of both queen and cardinal lay the conviction that if she would please God, she must avoid the sin of Saul. Saul had spared the Amalekites, and God had turned his face from him. God had greater enemies in England than the Amalekites. Historians have affected to exonerate Pole from the crime of the Marian persecution; although, without the legate's sanction, not a bishop in England could have raised a finger, not a bishop's court could have been opened to try a single heretic. If not with Pole, with whom did the guilt rest? Gardiner was jointly responsible for the commencement, but after the first executions, Gardiner interfered no further; he died, and the bloody scenes continued. Philip's confessor protested; Philip himself left the country; Renard and Charles were never weary of advising moderation, except towards those who were politically dangerous. Bonner was an instrument whose zeal more than once required the goad; and Mary herself, when she came to the throne, was so little cruel, that she would have spared even Northumberland himself. When the persecution assumed its ferocious aspect, she was exclusively under the direction of the dreamer

Who was the person most responsible for the Marian persecution?

CH. 33. who believed that he was born for England's regeneration. All evidence concurs to show that,
 after Philip's departure, Cardinal Pole was the single adviser on whom Mary relied. Is it to be supposed that, in the horrible crusade which thenceforward was the business of her life, the Papal legate, the sovereign director of the ecclesiastical administration of the realm, was not consulted, or, if consulted, that he refused his sanction? But it is not a question of conjecture or probability. From the legate came the first edict for the episcopal inquisition; under the legate every bishop held his judicial commission;
 while, if Smithfield is excepted, the most frightful scenes in the entire frightful period were witnessed under the shadow of his own metropolitan cathedral. His apologists have thrown the blame on his archdeacon and his suffragan: the guilt
 is not with the instrument, but with the hand which holds it. An admiring biographer* has asserted that the cruelties at Canterbury preceded the cardinal's consecration as archbishop, and the biographer has been copied by Dr. Lingard.
 The historian and his authority have exceeded
 the limits of permitted theological misrepresentation. The administration of the see belonged to Pole as much before his consecration as after it; but it will be seen that eighteen men and women perished at the stake in the town of Canterbury alone,—besides those who were put to death in other parts of the diocese—and five

A.D. 1555.
 October.

The persecution was more cruel
 in the diocese of Canterbury
 than in any other part
 of England,
 except London,

And was no
 less severe after Pole became archbishop
 than before.

* PHILLIPS.

were starved to death in the gaol there—after the legate's installation. He was not cruel; but he believed that, in the catalogue of human iniquities, there were none greater than the denial of the Roman Catholic faith, or the rejection of the Roman Bishop's supremacy; and that he himself was chosen by Providence for the re-establishment of both. Mary was driven to madness by the disappointment of the grotesque imaginations with which he had inflated her; and where two such persons were invested by the circumstances of the time with irresponsible power, there is no occasion to look further for the explanation of the dreadful events of the three ensuing years.

CH. 33.

A.D. 1555.
October.

The victims of the summer were chiefly undistinguished persons: Cardmaker and Bradford alone were in any way celebrated; and the greater prisoners, the three bishops at Oxford, the court had paused upon—not from mercy—their deaths had been long determined on; but Philip, perhaps, was tender of his person; their execution might occasion disturbances; and he and his suite might be the first objects on which the popular indignation might expend itself. Philip, however, had placed the sea between himself and danger, and if this was the cause of the hesitation, the work could now go forward.

A commission was appointed by Pole in September, consisting of Brookes, Bishop of Gloucester, Holyman, Bishop of Bristol, and White, Bishop of Lincoln, to try Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer, for obstinate heresy. The first trial had been irregular; the country was then unre-

Commissioners are appointed to try Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer.

CH. 33. conciled. The sentence which had been passed
 A.D. 1555. therefore was treated as non-existent, and the tedious forms of the Papacy continued still to throw a shield round the archbishop.

Sept. 7.
 The court
 sits in St.
 Mary's, and Cranmer is brought to the bar.

On Saturday, the 7th September,* the commissioners took their places under the altar of St. Mary's Church, at Oxford. The Bishop of Gloucester sate as president, Doctors Story and Martin appeared as proctors for the queen, and Cranmer was brought in under the custody of the city guard, in a black gown and leaning on a stick.

'Thomas, Archbishop of Canterbury,' cried an officer of the court, 'appear here, and make answer to that which shall be laid to thy charge; that is to say, for blasphemy, incontineny, and heresy; make answer to the Bishop of Gloucester, representing his Holiness the Pope.'

Cranmer
 will not admit the legate's authority.

The archbishop approached the bar, bent his head and uncovered to Story and Martin, who were present in behalf of the crown, then drew himself up, put on his cap again, and stood fronting Brookes. 'My Lord,' he said, 'I mean no contempt to your person, which I could have honoured as well as any of the others; but I have sworn never to admit the authority of the Bishop of Rome in England, and I must keep my oath.'

The president remonstrated, but without effect, and then proceeded to address the archbishop, who remained covered.†

* FOXE says the 12th; but this is wrong. — See Cranmer's Letter to the Queen: JENKINS, vol. i. p. 369.

† Exhortation of the Bishop of Gloucester to Thomas Cran-

‘ My Lord, we are come hither at this present to you, not intruding ourselves by our own authority, but sent by commission, as you know, by the Pope’s Holiness partly; partly from the King’s and Queen’s most excellent Majesties; not utterly to your discomfort, but rather to your comfort if you will yourself. For we are come not to judge you immediately, but to put you in remembrance of that which you have been partly judged of before, and shall be thoroughly judged of ere long.

CH. 33.

Sept. 7.

A.D. 1555.

The address of Brookes, Bishop of Gloucester.

‘ Neither our coming or commission is to dispute with you, but to examine you in matters which you have already disputed in, taught, and written; and of your resolute answers in those points and others, to make relation to them that shall give sentence on you. If you, of your part, be moved to come to a uniformity, then shall not only we take joy of our examination, but also they that have sent us. Remember yourself then, unde excideris, from whence you have fallen. You have fallen from the unity of your mother, the Holy Catholic Church, and that by open schism. You have fallen from the true and received faith of the same Catholic Church, and that by open heresy. You have fallen from your fidelity and promise towards God, in breaking your orders and vow of chastity, and that by open apostacy. You have fallen from your fidelity and promise towards God’s Vicar-general, the Pope, in breaking your oath made to his

He urges Cranmer to remember himself, to think upon his crimes, and repent.

mer : Cotton MSS., Vespasian, A. 25. A copy, more rounded and finished, is given by FOXE, in his account of Cranmer’s trial; but the latter has the appearance of having been touched up afterwards.

CH. 33. Holiness at your consecration, and that by open
 A.D. 1555. perjury. You have fallen from your fidelity and Sept. 7. allegiance towards God's magistrate, your prince and sovereign lady the queen, and that by open treason, whereof you are already attainted and convicted. Remember, unde excideris, from whence you have fallen, and in what danger you have fallen.

Once he was the light of the Church,
 and God blessed
 him;

He lent
 himself to the crimes
 of Henry VIII., and was given over to heresy and schism.

' You were sometime, as I and other poor men,
 in mean estate. God hath called you from better to better, from higher to higher, and never gave you over till he made you, legatum natum, Metropolitan Archbishop, Primate of England. Who was more earnest then in defence of the real presence of Christ's body and blood in the sacrament of the altar than ye were? Then was your candle shining to be a light to all the world, set on high on a pinnacle. But after you began to fall from the unity of the Catholic Church by open schism, and would no longer acknowledge the supremacy of the Pope's Holiness by God's word and ordinance;—and that by occasion, that you, in whose hands then rested the sum of all,
 being Primate, as was aforesaid, would not, according to your high vocation, stoutly withstand the most ungodly and unlawful request of your prince touching his divorce, as that blessed martyr, St. Thomas of Canterbury, sometime your predecessor, did withstand the unlawful requests of the prince of his time, but would still not only yield and bear with things not to be borne withal, but also set a-flame the fire already kindled—then your perfections diminished; then began you, for your own part, to fancy unlawful liberty. Then de- CH. 33

cayed your conscience of your former faith, your former promise, the vow of chastity and discipline A.D. 1555.
after the order of priesthood; and when good Sept. 7.
conscience was once cast off, then followed after, as St. Paul noteth, a shipwreck in the faith. Then fell you from the faith, and out of the Catholic Church, as out of a sure ship, into a sea of dangerous desperation; for out of the Church, to say with St. Cyprian, there is no hope of salvation at
all. To be brief; when you had forsaken God,
his Spouse, his faith, and fidelity to them both,
then God forsook you; and as the Apostle writeth
of the ingrate philosophers, delivered you up in reprobum sensum, and suffered you to fall from one inconvenience to another, as from perjury into schism, from schism into a kind of apostacy, from apostacy into heresy, from heresy into traitory,
and so, in conclusion, from traitory into the highest displeasure and worthiest indignation of your most benign and gracious queen.*

When the bishop ceased, the crown proctors rose, and demanded justice against the prisoner in the names of the king and queen.

The proc-
tors for the crown demand justice.

‘My Lord,’ Cranmer replied, ‘I do not acknowledge this session of yours, nor yet yourself
my mislawful judge; neither would I have appeared this day before you, but that I was brought hither; and therefore here I openly renounce you
as my judge, protesting that my meaning is not

* The address concluded with a prolix exhortation to repentance, which I omit. It may be read in a form sufficiently accurate in FOXE.

CH. 33.

A.D. 1555.

Sept. 7.

to make any answer as in a lawful judgment, for then I would be silent; but only for that I am bound in conscience to answer every man of that hope which I have in Jesus Christ.'

Cranmer kneels, prays, and then declares that he will never admit the Pope's authority.

He then knelt, and turning towards the west with his back to the court and the altar, he said the Lord's Prayer. After which, he rose, repeated the Creed, and said,—

'This I do profess as touching my faith, and make my protestation, which I desire you to note; I will never consent that the Bishop of Rome shall have any jurisdiction in this realm.'

'Mark, Master Cranmer,' interrupted Martin, 'you refuse and deny him by whose laws you do remain in life, being otherwise attainted of high treason, and but a dead man by the laws of the realm.'

'I protest before God I was no traitor,' said the archbishop. 'I will never consent to the Bishop of Rome, for then I should give myself to the devil. I have made an oath to the king, and I must obey the king by God's law. By the Scripture, the king is chief, and no foreign person in his own realm above him. The Pope is contrary to the crown. I cannot obey both, for no man can serve two masters at once. You attribute the keys to the Pope and the sword to the king. I say the king hath both.'

Obedience to the Pope is forbidden by the ancient laws of England.

Continuing the same argument, the archbishop entered at length into the condition of the law and the history of the Statutes of Provisors and Premunire : he showed that the constitution of the country was emphatically independent, and he maintained that no English subject could swear obedience to a foreign power without being involved in perjury.

CH. 33.

A.D. 1555.
Sept. 7.

The objection was set aside, and the subject of oaths was an opportunity for a taunt, which the queen's proctors did not overlook. Cranmer had unwillingly accepted the archbishopric when the Act of Appeals was pending, and when the future relations of England with the See of Rome, and the degree of authority which (if any) the Pope was to retain, were uncertain. In taking the usual oaths, therefore, by the advice of lawyers, he made an especial and avowed reservation of his duty to the crown;* and this so-called perjury Martin now flung in his teeth.

Cranmer is taunted with his oath at his consecration.

'It pleased the King's Highness,' Cranmer replied, 'many and sundry times to talk with me of the matter. I declared, that, if I accepted the office of archbishop, I must receive it at the Pope's hands, which I neither would nor could do, for his Highness was the only supreme governor of this Church in England. Perceiving

Cranmer defends himself, and explains his conduct.

* Although the circumstances of the time called properly for an open declaration of this kind on the part of Cranmer, yet every one of his predecessors, from the time of Edward I., must have been inducted with a tacit understanding of the same kind. If a bishop had been prosecuted under the Statutes of Provisors, his oath to the Papacy would have been no more admitted as an excuse by the Plantagenet sovereigns, than the oath of a college Fellow to obey the statutes of the founder would have saved him from penalties under the House of Hanover had he said mass in his college chapel. Because Cranmer, foreseeing an immediate collision between two powers, which each asserted claims upon him, expressed in words a qualification which was implied in the nature of the case—it was, and is (I regret to be obliged to speak in the present tense), but a shallow sarcasm to taunt him with premeditated perjury.

CH. 33. that I could not be brought to acknowledge the
 A.D. 1555. authority of the Bishop of Rome, the king called Sept. 7. Doctor Oliver and other civil lawyers, and devised with them how he might bestow it on me, enforcing me nothing against my conscience, who informed him I might do it by way of protestation. I said, I did not acknowledge the Bishop of Rome's authority further than as it agreed with the word of God, and that it might be lawful for me at all times to speak against him;
 and my protestation did I cause to be enrolled,
 and there I think it remaineth.'

The queen's
 proctor's
 reply.

'Let your protestation, with the rest of your talk, give judgment against you,' answered Martin. 'Hinc prima mali labes: of that your execrable perjury, and the king's coloured and too shamefully suffered adultery, came heresy and all mischief into the realm.'

The examination of
 the archbishop proceeds.

The special charges were then proceeded with.
 In reply to a series of questions, the archbishop said, that he had been twice married—
 once before, and once after he was in orders.
 In the time of Henry, he had kept his wife secretly, 'affirming that it was better for him to have his own wife, than to do like other priests,
 having the wives of others;' and he was not ashamed of what he had done.

He defends
 his conduct, and
 he is cited
 to answer
 for himself
 at Rome.

He admitted his writings upon the Eucharist;
 he avowed the authorship of the Catechism, of the Articles, and of a book against the Bishop of Winchester; and these books, and his conduct generally as Archbishop of Canterbury, he maintained and defended. His replies were entered by a notary, to be transmitted to the Pope, and for the present the business of the court with him was over.

CH. 33.

A.D. 1555.
Sept. 7.

‘Who can stay him that willingly runneth into perdition?’ said Brookes. ‘Who can save that will be lost? God would have you to be saved, and you refuse it.’

The archbishop was cited to appear at Rome within eighty days to answer to the charges which would there be laid against him; and in order that he might be able to obey the summons he was returned to his cell in Bocardo prison, and kept there in strict confinement.

Ridley and Latimer came next, and over them the Papal mantle flung no protection.

Ridley and Latimer follow.

They had been prisoners now for more than two years. What Latimer’s occupation had been for all that time, little remains to show, except three letters:—one, of but a few lines, was to a Mrs. Wilkinson, thanking her for some act of kindness;* another, was a general exhortation to ‘all unfeigned lovers of God’s truth,’ to be constant in their faith: the third, and most noteworthy, was to some one who had an opportunity of escaping from arrest, and probable martyrdom, by a payment of money, and who doubted whether he might lawfully avail himself of the chance: there was no question of recan-

Occupation of Latimer during his imprisonment.

* If the gift of a pot of cold water shall not be in oblivion with God, how can God forget your manifold and bountiful gifts, when He shall say unto you, ‘I was in prison, and you visited me.’ God grant us all to do and suffer while we be here as may be to His will and pleasure.—Latimer to Mrs. Wilkinson, from Bocardo: LATIMER’S Remains, p. 444.

CH. 33. tation; a corrupt official was ready to accept a bribe and ask no questions.

A.D. 1555.
September.

Latimer had not been one of those fanatics who thought it a merit to go in the way of danger and court persecution; but in this present case he shared the misgiving of his correspondent, and did 'highly allow his judgment in that he thought it not lawful to redeem himself from the crown, unless he would exchange glory for shame, and his inheritance for a mess of pottage.'

His letter
to a hesitating confessor.

'We were created,' Latimer said, 'to set forth God's glory all the days of our life, which we, as unthankful sinners, have forgotten to do, as we ought, all our days hitherto; and now God, by affliction, doth offer us good occasion to perform one day of our life, our duty. If any man perceive his faith not to abide the fire, let such an one with weeping buy his liberty until he hath obtained more strength, lest the gospel suffer by him some shameful recantation. Let the dead bury the dead. Do you embrace Christ's cross, and Christ shall embrace you. The peace of God be with you for ever.'*

Writings of Ridley
during the same period.

Ridley's pen had been more busy: he had written a lamentation over the state of England; he had written a farewell letter, taking leave of his friends, and taking leave of life, which, clouded as it was, his sunny nature made it hard to part from; he had written comfort to the afflicted for the gospel, and he had addressed a passionate appeal to the Temporal Lords to save England from the false shepherds who were wasting the flock of Christ. But both he and Latimer had looked death steadily in the face for two years, expecting it every day or hour. It was now come.

* LATIMER'S Remains, p. 429.

CH. 33.

A.D. 1555.
September.

On the 30th of September, the three bishops took their seats in the Divinity School. Ridley was led in for trial, and the legate's commission was read, empowering them to try him for the opinions which he had expressed in the disputation at Oxford the year before, and 'elsewhere in the time of perdition.' They were to degrade him from the priesthood if he persisted in his heresies, and deliver him over to the secular arm.

On being first brought before the court, Ridley stood bareheaded. At the names of the cardinal and the Pope, he put on his cap, like Cranmer, declining to acknowledge their authority. But his scruples were treated less respectfully than the archbishop's. He was ordered to take it off, and when he refused, it was removed by a beadle.

Sept. 30.
Ridley is brought up for trial, and, like Cranmer, refuses to admit the authority of the court.

He was then charged with having denied transubstantiation, and the propitiatory sacrifice of the mass, and was urged at length to recant. His opinions on the real presence were peculiar. Christ, he said, was not the sacrament, but was really and truly in the sacrament, as the Holy Ghost was with the water at baptism and yet was not the water. The subtlety of the position was perplexing, but the knot was cut by the crucial question, whether, after the consecration of the elements, the substance of bread and wine remained. He was allowed the night to consider his answer, but he left no doubt what that answer

He states his opinion of the nature of the sacrament.

CH. 33. would be. The bishops told him that they were not come to condemn him, their province was to
 A.D. 1555.
 Sept. 30. condemn no one, but only to cut off the heretic
 from the Church, for the temporal judge to deal with as he should think fit. The cowardly sophism had been heard too often. Ridley thanked the court 'for their gentleness,' 'being the same which Christ had of the high priest:'
 'the high priest said it was not lawful for him
 to put any man to death, but committed Christ
 to Pilate; neither would suffer him to absolve Christ, though he sought all the means therefore that he might.'

Latimer is tried next.

Ridley withdrew, and Latimer was then introduced—eighty years old now—dressed in an old threadbare gown of Bristol frieze, a handkerchief on his head with a night-cap over it, and over that again another cap, with two broad flaps buttoned under the chin. A leather belt was round his waist, to which a Testament was attached; his spectacles, without a case, hung from his neck. So stood the greatest man perhaps then living in the world, a prisoner on his trial, waiting to be condemned to death by men professing to be the ministers of God. As it was in the days of the prophets, so it was in the Son of man's days; as it was in the days of the Son of man, so was it in the Reformers' days; as it was in the days of the Reformers, so will it be to the end, so long and so far as a class of men are permitted to hold power, who call themselves the commissioned and authoritative teachers of truth. Latimer's trial was the counterpart of Ridley's: the charge was the same, and the result was the same, except that the stronger intellect vexed itself less with nice distinctions. Bread was bread, said Latimer, and wine was wine; there was a change in the sacrament, it was true, but the change was not in the nature, but the dignity. He too was reprieved for the day. The following morning, the court sat in St. Mary's Church, with the authorities of town and university, heads of houses, mayor, aldermen, and sheriff. The prisoners were brought to the bar. The same questions were asked, the same answers were returned, and sentence was pronounced upon them, as heretics obstinate and incurable.

CH. 33.

A.D. 1555.
Sept. 30.
He says
that bread
is bread,
and wine is wine,

October 1.

And, with Ridley, is condemned
to the stake.

Execution did not immediately follow. The convictions for which they were about to die had been adopted by both of them comparatively late in life. The legate would not relinquish the hope of bringing them back into the superstition in which they had been born, and had lived so long; and Soto, a Spanish friar, who was teaching divinity at Oxford in the place of Peter Martyr, was set to work on them.

Attempts are made to move them,
but are
made in vain.

But one of them would not see him, and on the other he could make no impression. Those whom God had cast away, thought Pole, were not to be saved by man;* and the 16th of Oc-

* A Rev. P. Soto accepi litteras Oxonio datas quibus me certiore facit quid cum duobus illis hæreticis egerit qui jam erant damnati, quorum alter ne loqui quidem cum eo voluit: cum altero est locutus sed nihil profecit, ut facile intelligatur a nemine servari posse quos Deus projecit. Itaque de illis supplicium est sumptum.—Pole to Philip: Epist. Reg. Pol. vol. v. p. 47.

CH. 33. tober was fixed upon as the day on which they were to suffer. Ridley had been removed from Bocardo, and was under the custody of the mayor,
 a man named Irish, whose wife was a bigoted and fanatical Catholic. On the evening of the 15th there was a supper at the mayor's house,
 where some members of Ridley's family were permitted to be present. He talked cheerfully of his approaching 'marriage;' his brother-in-law promised to be in attendance, and, if possible, to bring with him his wife, Ridley's sister. Even the hard eyes of Mrs. Irish were softened to tears,
 as she listened and thought of what was coming.
 The brother-in-law offered to sit up through the night, but Ridley said there was no occasion; he 'minded to go to bed, and sleep as quietly as ever he did in his life.' In the morning he wrote a letter to the queen. As Bishop of London he had granted renewals of certain leases, on which he had received fines. Bonner had refused to recognise them, and he entreated the queen, for Christ's sake, either that the leases should be allowed, or that some portion of his own confiscated property might be applied to the repayment of the tenants.* The letter was long; by the time it was finished, the sheriff's officers were probably in readiness.

A.D. 1555.
 October.

Ridley
 makes his preparations
 with the greatest cheerfulness,

Being anxious chiefly on account of an act of injustice
 committed by Bonner
 as Bishop
 of London.

The place selected for the burning was outside the north wall of the town, a short stone's † Foxe, vol. vii. p. 545. It is to the discredit of Mary that she paid no attention to this appeal, and left Bonner's injustice to be repaired by the first parliament of Elizabeth. Commons Journals, 1 Elizabeth.

throw from the southward corner of Balliol College, and about the same distance from Bocardo prison, from which Cranmer was intended to witness his friends' sufferings.

CH. 33.

A.D. 1553.
Oct. 16.

Lord Williams of Thame was on the spot by the queen's order; and the city guard were under arms to prevent disturbance. Ridley appeared first, walking between the mayor and one of the aldermen. He was dressed in a furred black gown, 'such as he was wont to wear being bishop,' a furred velvet tippet about his neck, and a velvet cap. He had trimmed his beard, and had washed himself from head to foot; a man evidently nice in his appearance, a gentleman, and liking to be known as such. The way led under the windows of Bocardo, and he looked up; but Soto, the friar, was with the archbishop, making use of the occasion, and Ridley did not see him.* In turning round, however, he saw Latimer coming up behind him in the frieze coat, with the cap and handkerchief—the workday costume unaltered, except that under his cloak, and reaching to his feet, the old man wore a long new shroud.

The burning of Ridley and Latimer.

'Oh! be ye there?' Ridley exclaimed.

'Yea,' Latimer answered. 'Have after as fast as I can follow.'

Ridley ran to him and embraced him. 'Be of good heart, brother,' he said. 'God will either

* The execution, however, was doubtless appointed to take place on that spot, that Cranmer might see that. An old engraving in Foxe's Martyrs represents him as on the leads of the Tower while the burning was going forward, looking at it, and praying.

CH. 33. assuage the flame, or else strengthen us to abide it.' They knelt and prayed together, and then
A.D. 1555.
Oct. 16. exchanged a few words in a low voice, which were not overheard.

Lord Williams, the vice-chancellor, and the doctors were seated on a form close to the stake. A sermon was preached, 'a scant one,' 'of scarce a quarter of an hour;' and then Ridley begged that for Christ's sake he might say a few words.

Lord Williams looked to the doctors, one of whom started from his seat, and laid his hand on Ridley's lips—

'Recant,' he said, 'and you may both speak and live.'

'So long as the breath is in my body,' Ridley answered, 'I will never deny my Lord Christ and his known truth. God's will be done in me. I commit our cause,' he said, in a loud voice, turning to the people, 'to Almighty God, who shall indifferently judge all.'

The brief preparations were swiftly made. Ridley gave his gown and tippet to his brother-in-law, and distributed remembrances among those who were nearest to him. To Sir Henry Lee he gave a new groat, to others he gave handkerchiefs, nutmegs, slices of ginger, his watch, and miscellaneous trinkets; 'some plucked off the points of his hose;' 'happy,' it was said, 'was he that might get any rag of him.'

Latimer had nothing to give. He threw off his cloak, stood bolt upright in his shroud, and the friends took their places on either side of the stake.

‘O Heavenly Father,’ Ridley said, ‘I give unto thee most humble thanks, for that thou hast called me to be a professor of thee even unto death. Have mercy, O Lord, on this realm of England, and deliver the same from all her enemies.’

CH. 33.
A.D. 1555.
Oct. 16.

A chain was passed round their bodies, and fastened with a staple.

A friend brought a bag of powder and hung it round Ridley’s neck.

‘I will take it to be sent of God,’ Ridley said. ‘Have you more, for my brother?’

‘Yea, sir,’ the friend answered. ‘Give it him betimes then,’ Ridley replied, ‘lest ye be too late.’

The fire was then brought. To the last moment, Ridley was distressed about the leases, and, bound as he was, he entreated Lord Williams to intercede with the queen about them.

‘I will remember your suit,’ Lord Williams answered. The lighted torch was laid to the faggots. ‘Be of good comfort, Master Ridley,’ Latimer cried at the crackling of the flames. ‘Play the man: we shall this day light such a candle, by God’s grace, in England, as I trust shall never be put out.’

‘In manus tuas, Domine, commendo spiritum meum,’ cried Ridley. ‘Domine, recipe spiritum meum.’

‘O Father of Heaven,’ said Latimer, on the other side, ‘receive my soul.’

Latimer died first: as the flame blazed up about him, he bathed his hands in it, and stroked his face. The powder exploded and he became instantly senseless.

His companion was less fortunate. The

CH. 33. sticks had been piled too thickly over the gorse
 that was under them; the fire smouldered round
 his legs, and the sensation of suffering was unusually protracted. 'I cannot burn,' he called;
 'Lord, have mercy on me; let the fire come to me; I cannot burn.' His brother-in-law with awkward kindness threw on more wood, which only kept down the flame. At last some one lifted the pile with 'a bill,' and let in the air;
 the red tongues of fire shot up fiercely, Ridley wrested himself into the middle of them, and the powder did its work.

A.D. 1555.
 Oct. 16.

The horrible sight worked upon the beholders
 as it has worked since, and will work for ever,
 while the English nation survives—being notwithstanding, as in justice to those who caused
 these accursed cruelties, must never be forgotten—
 a legitimate fruit of the superstition, that, in the eyes of the Maker of the world, an error of belief is the greatest of crimes; that while for all other sins there is forgiveness, a mistake in the intellectual intricacies of speculative opinion will be punished not with the brief agony of a painful death, but with tortures to which there shall be no end.

The treatment of the Protestants
 who were left in prison was worse
 than the treatment
 of those who were burnt.

But martyrdom was often but a relief from more barbarous atrocities. In the sad winter months which were approaching, the poor men and women, who, untried and uncondemned, were crowded into the bishops' prisons, experienced such miseries as the very dogs could scarcely suffer and survive. They were beaten, they were starved, they were flung into dark, fetid

dens, where rotting straw was their bed, their feet were fettered in the stocks, and their clothes were their only covering, while the wretches who died in their misery were flung out into the fields where none might bury them.*

CH. 33.

A.D. 1555.
October.

Lollard's Tower and Bonner's coal-house were the chief scenes of barbarity. Yet there were times when even Bonner loathed his work. He complained that he was troubled with matters that were none of his; the bishops in other

* FOXE, vols. vii. viii., passim, especially vol. vii. p. 605. Philpot's Petition, Ibid. p. 682; and an Account of the Prisons at Canterbury, vol. viii. p. 255. At Canterbury, after Pole became archbishop, his archdeacon, Harpsfeld, had fifteen prisoners confined together, of whom five were starved to death; the other ten were burnt. But before they suffered, and while one of those who died of hunger still survived, they left on record the following account of their treatment, and threw it out of a window of the castle:—

'Be it known to all men that shall read, or hear read, these our letters, that we, the poor prisoners of the castle of Canterbury, for God's truth, are kept and lie in cold irons, and our keeper will not suffer any meat to be brought to us to comfort us. And if any man do bring in anything—as bread, butter, cheese, or any other food—the said keeper will charge them that so bring us anything (except money or raiment), to carry it thence again; or else, if he do receive any food of any for us, he doth keep it for himself, and he and his servants do spend it; so that we have nothing thereof; and thus the keeper keepeth away our victuals from us; insomuch that there are four of us prisoners there for God's truth famished already, and thus it is his mind to famish us all. And we think he is appointed thereto by the bishops and priests, and also of the justices, so to famish us; and not only us of the said castle, but also all other prisoners in other prisons for the like cause to be also famished. Notwithstanding, we write not these our letters to that intent we might not afford to be famished for the Lord Jesus' sake, but for this cause and intent, that they having no law so to famish us in prison, should not do it privily, but that the murderers' hearts should be openly known to all the world, that all men may know of what church they are, and who is their father.' — FOXE, vol. viii. p. 255.

CH. 33. parts of England thrust upon his hands offenders
 whom they durst not pardon and would not themselves put to death; and, being in London,
 he was himself under the eyes of the court, and
 could not evade the work.* Against Bonner,
 however, the world's voice rose the loudest.
 His brutality was notorious and unquestionable,
 and a published letter was addressed to him by a lady, in which he was called 'the common cut-throat and general slaughter-slave to all the bishops in England.'† 'I am credibly informed,'
 said this person to him, 'that your Lordship doth believe, and hath in secret said, there is no hell.
 The very Papists themselves begin now to abhor
 your bloodthirstiness, and speak shame of your tyranny. Every child can call you by name,
 and say, 'Bloody Bonner is Bishop of London!'
 and every man hath it as perfect ~~upon his fingers~~ ends as his Paternoster, how many you for your part have burned with fire and famished in prison this three-quarters of a year. Though your Lordship believe neither heaven nor hell,
 neither God nor devil, yet if your Lordship love
 your own honesty, you were best to surcease from this cruel burning and murdering. Say not but a woman gave you warning. As for the obtaining your Popish purpose in suppressing of the truth, I put you out of doubt, you shall not obtain it so long as you go this way to work

A.D. 1555.
 October.
 The work
 is cast chiefly upon Bonner,

To whom a lady writes
 a letter,

Telling him
 the effect of the persecution in
 the country.

* See especially his conversation with Philpot: Foxx, vol. vii. p. 611.

† Godly Letter addressed to Bonner: Ibid., p. 712.

as you do. You have lost the hearts of twenty thousand that were rank Papists within this twelve months.' CH. 33.
A.D. 1555.
October.

In the last words lay the heart of the whole matter. The martyrs alone broke the spell of orthodoxy, and made the establishment of the Reformation possible.

In the midst of such scenes the new parliament was about to meet. Money was wanted for the crown debts, and the queen was infatuated enough still to meditate schemes for altering the succession, or, at least, for obtaining the consent of the legislature to Philip's coronation, that she might bribe him back to her side.* A new parliament is about to meet.

As the opening of the session approached, Elizabeth was sent again from the court to be out of sight and out of reach of intrigue; and Mary had the mortification of knowing that her sister's passage through London was a triumphal procession. The public enthusiasm became so marked at last that the princess was obliged to ride forward with a few servants, leaving the gentlemen who were her escort to keep back the people. Fresh alarms, too, had risen on the side of the Papacy. Cardinal Caraffa, Paul IV. as he was now named, on assuming the tiara, had put out a bull among his first acts, reasserting the decision Elizabeth is sent away from the court.

The new Pope threatens to require the restoration of the Church lands.

* Pour le faire plustost retourner elle fera toutes choses incredible en ce dict parlement en faveur dudict Sieur L'on dict que l'occasion pour laquelle le dict parlement a esté assemble, ne tend à aultre fin que pour faire s'il est possible tumber le gouvernement absolu de ce royaume entre les mains de ce roy.—Noailles to the King of France, October 21: Ambasades, vol. v.

CH. 33. of the canons on the sanctity of the estates of the Church, and threatening laymen who presumed
 A. D. 1555. to withhold such property from its lawful owners October. with anathemas. In a conversation with Lord Montague, the English ambassador at Rome, he had used language far from reassuring on the concessions of his predecessor; and some violent demonstration would undoubtedly have been made in parliament, had not Paul been persuaded to except England especially from the general edict.

The Pope
 takes part
 with the French in the European war,

Which threatens
 to draw England
 into war
 with him.

Even then the irritation was not allayed, and a whole train of sorrows was in store for Mary from the violent character of Caraffa. Political Popes have always been a disturbing element in the European system. Paul IV., elected by French influence, showed his gratitude by plunging into the quarrel between France and the Empire. He imprisoned Imperialist cardinals in St. Angelo; he persecuted the Colonnas on account of their Imperialist tendencies, levelled their fortresses, and seized their lands. The Cardinal of Lorraine hastened to Rome to conclude an alliance offensive and defensive on behalf of France; and the queen, distracted between her religion and her duty as a wife, saw Philip on the point of being drawn into parricidal hostility with his and her spiritual father. Nay, she herself might be involved in the same calamity; for so bitter was the English humour that the Liberal party in the council were inclined to take part in the war, if they would have the Pope for an enemy; and

Philip would be too happy in their support to look too curiously to the motives of it.*

CH. 33.

A calamity of a more real kind was also approaching Mary. She was on the point of losing the only able minister on whose attachment she could rely. Gardiner's career on earth was about to end.

A.D. 1555.
October.

On the 6th of October, Noailles described the Bishop of Winchester as sinking rapidly, and certain to die before Christmas,† yet still eager and energetic, perfectly aware of his condition, yet determined to work till the last.

Gardiner falls ill, of jaundice.

Noailles himself had two hours' conversation with him on business: when he took his leave, the chancellor conducted him through the crowded antechamber to the door, leaning heavily on his arm. 'The people thought he was dead,' he said, 'but there was some life in him yet.'

Notwithstanding his condition, he roused himself for the meeting of parliament on the 21st; he even spoke at the opening, and he was in his place in the House of Lords on the second day of the session; but his remaining strength broke down immediately after, and he died at Whitehall Palace on the 13th of November. The Protestants, who believed that he was the author of the persecution, expected that it would cease

He rouses himself for the opening of parliament, but breaks down immediately after, and dies.

* Ce soit ung argument plus grand que tout aultre pour faire entrer ceulx cy à la guerre ouverte: estant ceste nation comme ung chascung scait fort ennemie de sadiet Sainctite.—Noailles to Montmorency: Ambassades, vol. v. p. 188.
† Same to the same.—Ibid. p. 150.

CH. 33. with his end; they were deceived in their hopes, for their sufferings continued unabated. In their opinion of his conduct they were right, yet right but partially.

A. D. 1555
November.

Character
and policy
of Gar-diner.

Stephen Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester, was the pupil of Wolsey, and had inherited undiminished the pride of the ecclesiastical order. If he went with Henry in his separation from the Papacy, he intended that the English Church should retain, notwithstanding, unimpaired authority and undiminished privileges. The humiliations heaped upon the clergy by the king had not discouraged him, for the Catholic doctrine was maintained unshaken, and so long as the priesthood was regarded as a peculiar order, gifted with supernatural powers, so long as the sacraments were held essential conditions of salvation, and the priesthood alone could administer them, he could feel assured that, sooner or later, their temporal position would be restored to them.

Gardiner
was, undoubtedly,
responsible for the commencement of the persecu-
tion.

Thus, while loyal to the royal supremacy, the Bishop of Winchester had hated heresy, and hated all who protected heresy with a deadly hatred. He passed the Six Articles Bill; he destroyed Cromwell; he laboured with all his might to destroy Cranmer; and, at length, when Henry was about to die, he lent himself, though too prudently to be detected, to the schemes of Surrey and the Catholics upon the regency. The failure of those schemes, and the five years of arbitrary imprisonment under Edward, had not softened feelings already more than violent. He returned to power exasperated by personal injury; and justified, as he might easily believe himself to be, in his opinion of the tendencies of heresy, by the scandals of the Protestant administration, he obtained, by unremitting assiduity the re-enactment of the persecuting laws, which he himself launched into operation with imperious cruelty.

CH. 33.

A.D. 1555.
November.

Yet there was something in Gardiner's character which was not wholly execrable. For thirty years he worked unweariedly in the service of the public; his judgment as a member of council was generally excellent; and Somerset, had he listened to his remonstrances, might have saved both his life and credit. He was vindictive, ruthless, treacherous, but his courage was indomitable. He resisted Cromwell till it became a question which of the two should die, and the lot was as likely to have fallen to him as to his rival. He would have murdered Elizabeth with the forms of law or without, but Elizabeth was the hope of all that he most detested. He was no dreamer, no high-flown enthusiast, but he was a man of clear eye and hard heart, who had a purpose in his life which he pursued with unflagging energy. Living as he did in revolutionary times, his hand was never slow to strike when an enemy was in his power; yet in general when Gardiner struck, he stooped, like the eagle, at the nobler game, leaving the linen-drapers and apprentices to 'the mousing owls.' His demerits were vast; his merits were small, yet something.

Yet he had been an active public servant; he was cruel, but he was brave,

And his policy was distinct and intelligible.

'Well, well,' as some one said, winding up his

CH. 33. epitaph, 'Mortuus est, et sepultus est, et descendit ad inferos; let us say no more about him.'*

A.D. 1555.
October.

A subsidy is asked for
in parliament.

The queen's expenditure has
been large,
and the crown
debts are still large.

To return to the parliament. On the 23rd of October, a bull of Paul IV., confirming the dispensation of Julius, was read in the House of Commons.† On the 29th the crown debts were alleged as a reason for demanding a subsidy. The queen had been prevented from indulging her desire for a standing army. The waste and peculation of the late reign had been put an end to; and the embarrassments of the treasury were not of her creation. Nevertheless the change in social habits, and the alteration in the value of money, had prevented the reduction of the expenditure from being carried to the extent which had been contemplated; the marriage had been in many ways costly, and large sums had been spent in restoring plundered church plate. So great had been the difficulties of the treasury, that, although fresh loans had been contracted with the Jews, the wages of the household were again two years in arrear.

Parliament showed no disposition to be illiberal; they only desired to be satisfied that if they gave money it would be applied to the purpose for which it was demanded. The Subsidy Bill, when first introduced, was opposed in the House of Commons on the ground that the queen would give the keys of the treasury to her husband; and after a debate, a minority of a hundred voted for refusing the grant.* The general spirit of the Houses, however, was, on the whole, more generous. Two fifteenths were voted in addition to the subsidy, which the queen, on her side, was able to decline with thanks.† The money question was settled quietly, and the business of the session proceeded.

* Special Grace appointed to have been said at York on the Accession of Elizabeth.—Tanner MSS., Bodleian Library.

† Commons Journals: 2nd and 3rd Philip and Mary.

CH. 33.

A.D. 1554.
October.
The Commons will give money, if they can be assured that the queen will not give it to Philip.

If her subjects were indifferent to their souls, Mary was anxious about her own. On the 11th of November, a bill was read a first time in the House of Lords, 'whereby the King's and Queen's Majesties surrendered, and gave into the hands of the Pope's Holiness, the first-fruits and tenths of all ecclesiastical benefices.' The reception of the measure can be traced in the changes of form which it experienced. The payment of annates to the See of Rome was a grievance, both among clergy and laity, of very ancient standing. The clergy, though willing to be relieved from paying first-fruits to the crown, were not so loyal to the successors of St. Peter as to desire to restore their contributions into the old channel; while the laity, who from immemorial time had objected on principle to the payment of tribute to a foreign sovereign, were now, through their possession of the abbey lands and the impropriation of benefices, immediately interested parties.

A bill is brought in for the surrender of first-fruits to the Pope.

* Commons Journals, 2nd and 3rd Philip and Mary.—Noailles to the Constable, October 31.

† Commons Journ. Noailles says that the queen demanded the fifteenths, and that the Commons refused to grant them. The account in the Journals is confirmed by a letter of Lord Talbot to the Earl of Shrewsbury.—Lodge's Illustrations, vol. i. p. 207.

CH. 33. On the 19th of November fifty members of the House of Commons waited, by desire, upon the queen, to hear her own resolutions, and to listen to an admonition from the cardinal.* On the 20th a second bill was introduced, 'whereby the King's and Queen's Majesties surrendered and gave the first-fruits and tenths into the hands of the laity.'† The crown would not receive annates longer in any form; and as laymen liable to the payment of them could not conveniently be required to pay tribute to Rome, it was left to their consciences to determine whether they would follow the queen's example in a voluntary surrender.

A. D. 1555.
October.
The queen
has an interview
with a deputation of
the Commons.

The Lords
will allow
the queen
to relinquish the
first-fruits,
but the Pope's
name is struck out.

Even then, however, the original bill could not pass so long as the Pope's name was in it, or so long as the Pope was interested in it. As it left the Lords, it was simply a surrender, on behalf of the crown, of all claims whatever upon first-fruits of benefices, whether from clergy or laity. The tenths were to continue to be paid. Lay impropriators should pay them to the crown. The clergy should pay them to the legate, by whom they were to be applied to the discharge of the monastic pensions, from which the crown was to be relieved. The crown at the same time set a precedent of sacrifice by placing in the legate's

* Mr. Speaker declared the queen's pleasure to be spoken yesterday, for to depart with the first-fruits and tenths; and my Lord Cardinal spake for the tithes and impropriations of benefices to be spiritual. — Commons Journals, November 20: 2nd and 3rd Philip and Mary.

† Lords Journals.

hands unreservedly every one of its own impropriations.* CH. 33.

In this form the measure went down to the Commons, where it encountered fresh and violent opposition. To demand a subsidy in one week, and in the next to demand permission to sacrifice a sixth part of the ordinary revenue, was inconsistent and irrational. The laity had no ambition to take upon themselves the burdens of the clergy. On the 27th there was a long discussion;† on the 3rd of December the bill was carried, but with an adverse minority of a hundred and twenty-six, against a majority of a hundred and ninety-three.‡

A.D. 1555.
December.
The bill is opposed in the Lower House, and passes with difficulty.

* 2nd and 3rd Philip and Mary, cap. iv.

† Commons Journals.

‡ Ibid. The temper of the opposition may be gathered from the language of a pamphlet which appeared on the accession of Elizabeth.

The writer describes the clergy as 'lads of circumspection, and verily filiij hujus sæculi.' He complains of their avarice in inducing the queen, 'at one chop, to give away fifty thousand pounds and better yearly from the inheritance of her crown unto them, and many a thousand after, unto those idle hypocrites besides.'

He then goes on:—

'And yet this great profusion of their prince did so smally serve their hungry guts, like starven tikes that were never content with more than enough; at all their collations, assemblies, and sermons, they never left yelling and yelping in pursuit of their prey, Restore! Restore! These devout deacons nothing regarded how some for long service and travail abroad, while they sate at home—some for shedding his blood in defence of his prince's cause and country, while they with safety, all careless in their cabins, in luxe and lewdness, did sail in a sure port—some selling his antient patrimony for purchase of these lands, while they must have all by gift a God's name—they nothing regarding, I say, what injury to thousands, what undoing to most men, what danger of uproar and tumult throughout the whole realm, and what a weakening to the State should thereby arise; with none of these matters were they moved a whit, but still held on their cry, Restore! Restore!

'And that ye may be sure they meant nothing more than

CH. 33.

A.D. 1555.
December.
The queen
is displeased with the
conduct of
parliament.

Language had been heard in both Houses during the debates, of unusual violence. Bradford's letter on the succession was circulating freely among the members, and the parliament from which the queen anticipated so much for her husband's interests proved the most intractable with which she had had to deal.* After the difficulty which she had experienced with the first-fruits, she durst not so much as introduce the question of the crown.† She attempted a bill for the restoration of the forfeited lands of the Howards, but it was lost.‡ The Duchess of Suffolk,§ with several other persons how to have all, and that with all haste; after that their Pope, this seditious Paul IV., that now is, had sent hither his bulls and his thunderbolts for that cause, and other (and yet little restored, because the world, indeed, would not be so faced out of their livelihood) sundry of our prelates, like hardy champions, stakke not a whit themselves to thrust lords out of their lands, and picked quarrels to their lawful possessions. Well. Let nobility consider the case as they list; but, as some think, if the clergy come to be masters again, they will teach them a school point. Christ taught the young man that perfection was in vade, vende, et da, not in mane, acquire, accumula. — Grace to be said at the Accession of Elizabeth: Tanner MSS., Bodleian Library.

* NOAILLES.

† Michele, the Venetian ambassador, in his curious but most inaccurate account of England during this reign, states that the queen had it in her power to cut off Elizabeth from the succession, but that she was prevented from doing it by Philip. Michele's information suffered from the policy of Venice. Venice held aloof from the complications of the rest of Europe, and her representatives were punished by exclusion from secrets of State. The letters of Noailles might be suspected, but the correspondence of Renard with Charles V. leaves no doubt whatever either as to the views of the Spaniards towards Elizabeth, of their designs on the crown, or of the causes by which they were baffled.

‡ Noailles to the King of France, December 16.

§ The witty Katherine Brandon, widow of Henry VIII.'s Charles Brandon, married to Richard Bertie. She was a lady of advanced opinions, between whom and the Bishop of

of rank, had lately joined the refugees on the Continent; she attempted to carry a measure for the confiscation of their property, and failed again.* A sharp blow was dealt also at the recovered privileges of ecclesiastics. A man named Benet Smith, who had been implicated in a charge of murder, and was escaping under plea of clergy, was delivered by a special act into the hands of justice.† The leaven of the heretical spirit was still unsubdued. The queen dissolved her fourth parliament on the 9th of September; and several gentlemen who had spoken out with unpalatable freedom were seized and sent to the Tower. She was unwise, thought Noailles; such arbitrary acts were only making her day by day more detested, and, should opportunity offer, would bring her to utter destruction.

Unwise she was indeed, and most unhappy. When the poor results of the session became known to Philip, he sent orders that such of his Spanish suite as he had left behind him should no longer

CH. 33.

A. D. 1555.
December.
She tries to pass two other measures, without success.

Parliament is dissolved, and several persons, who had spoken too freely, are sent to the Tower.

Remember

Winchester there were some passages-at-arms. She dressed a dog in a rochet on one occasion, and called it Bishop Gardiner.

Gardiner himself said that he was once at a party at the Duke of Suffolk's, and it was a question who should take the Duchess down to dinner. She wanted to go with her husband; but as that could not be, 'My lady,' said Gardiner, 'taking me by the hand, for that my lord would not take her himself, said that, forasmuch as she could not sit down with my lord whom she loved best, she had chosen me whom she loved worst.'—HOLINSHED.

* Et de mesme fust rejezté audict parlement à la grande confusion de ladicte dame ung aultre bill par lequel elle vouloit confisquer les personnes et biens de ceulx qui sont transfuges de ce royaume depuis son advenement à la couronne.—Noailles to the King of France, December 16: Ambassades, vol. v.

† 2nd and 3rd Philip and Mary, cap. 17.

CH. 33. afflict themselves with remaining in a country which they abhorred; he summoned them all to come to him except Alphonso, his confessor.
 'The queen wept and remonstrated; more piteous
 lamentations were never heard from woman.'
 'How,' exclaimed a brother of Noailles,* 'is she repaid now for having quarrelled with her subjects, and set aside her father's will! The misery which she suffers in her husband's absence cannot so change her but that she will risk crown and life to establish him in the sovereignty, and thus recal him to her side. Nevertheless, she will fail, and he will not come. He is weary of having laboured so long in a soil so barren;
 while she who feels old age stealing so fast upon her, cannot endure to lose what she has bought so dearly.'

A.D. 1555.
 December.
 Philip recalls all his suite from England.

The misery
 of the queen.

She exerts
 herself in
 the restoration of
 the Church.

Nothing now was left for Mary but to make such use as she was able of the few years of life which were to remain to her. If Elizabeth, the hated Anne Boleyn's hated daughter, was to succeed her on the throne, and there was no remedy, it was for her to work so vigorously in the restoration of the Church that her labours could not afterwards be all undone. At her own expense she began to rebuild and refound the religious houses. The Grey Friars were replaced at Greenwich, the Carthusians at Sheene, the Brigittines at Sion. The house of the Knights of St. John in London was restored; the Dean and Chapter of Westminster gave way to Abbot

* François de Noailles to Madame de Roye: Ambassades, vol. v.

Feckenham and a college of monks. Yet these touching efforts might soften her sorrow but could not remove it. Philip was more anxious than ever about the marriage of Elizabeth; and as Mary could not overcome her unwillingness to sanction by act of hers Elizabeth's pretensions, Philip wrote her cruel letters, and set his confessor to lecture her upon her duties as a wife.* These letters she chiefly spent her time in answering, shut up almost alone, trusting no one but Pole, and seeing no one but her

CH. 33.

A.D. 1555.
December.Philip
writes letters which do not comfort her.

* Among the surviving memorials of Mary, none is more affecting than a rough copy of an answer to one of these epistles, which is preserved in the Cotton Library. It is painfully scrawled, and covered with erasures and corrections, in which may be traced the dread in which she stood of offending Philip. Demander license de votre Haultesse, is crossed through and altered into Supplier très humblement. Where she had described herself as obeissante, she enlarged the word into très obeissante; and the tone throughout is most piteous. She entreats the king to appoint some person or persons to talk with her about the marriage. She says that the conscience which she has about it she has had for twenty-four years; that is to say, since Elizabeth's birth. Nevertheless, she will agree to Philip's wish, if the realm will agree. She is ready to discuss it; but she complains, so far as she dares complain, of the confessor. The priests trouble her, she says. 'Alfonsez especialement me proposoit questions si obscures que mon simple entendement ne les pouvoit comprendre, comme pour exemple il me demandoit qui estoit roy au temps de Adam, et disoit comme j'estoy obligée de faire ceste marriage par ung article de mon Credo, mais il ne l'exposoit. . . . Aultres choses trop difficiles pour moy d'entendre. . . . ainsy qu'il estoit impossible en si peu de temps de changer. . . . conscience. . . . Votre Haultesse escript en ses dictes lettres que si le consent de ce royaume iroyt au contraire, Votre Haultesse en imputerait la coulpe en moy. Je supplie en toute humilité votre Haultesse de differer ceste affaire jusques à votre retour; et donques Votre Haultesse sera juge si je seray coupable ou non. Car autrement je vinray en jalousie de Votre Haultesse la quelle sera pire à moy que mort; car j'en ay commence déjà d'en taster trop à mon grand regret,' &c.—Cotton.

CH. 33. women. If she was compelled to appear in public, she had lost her power of self-control; she would burst into fits of violent and uncontrollable passion; she believed every one about her to be a spy in the interest of the Lords. So disastrously miserable were all the consequences of her marriage, that it was said, the Pope, who had granted the dispensation for the contraction of it had better grant another for its dissolution.* Unfortunately there was one direction open in which her frenzy could have uncontrolled scope.

Cranmer writes to the queen, insisting that she can punish her own criminals without consulting the Pope.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, after his trial and his citation to Rome, addressed to the queen a singular letter: he did not ask for mercy, and evidently he did not expect mercy: he reasserted calmly the truth of the opinions for which he was to suffer; but he protested against the indignity done to the realm of England, and the degradation of the royal prerogative, 'when the king and queen, as if they were subjects in their own realm, complained and required justice at a stranger's hand against their own subjects, being already condemned to death by their own laws.' 'Death,' he said, 'could not grieve him much more than to have his most dread and gracious sovereigns, to whom under God he owed all obedience, to be his accusers in judgment before a stranger and outward power.'†

The appeal was intended perhaps to provoke the queen to let him die with his friends, in whose

MSS., Titus, B. 2 : printed very incorrectly in STYRPE's Memorials, vol. vi. p. 418.

* NOAILLES.

† Cranmer to Queen Mary: JENKINS, vol. i. p. 369. This example and companionship he felt his strength supported. But it could not be; he was the spectator of their fate, while his own was still held at a distance before him. He witnessed the agonies of Ridley; and the long imprisonment, the perpetual chafing of Soto, the Spanish friar, and the dreary sense that he was alone, forsaken of man, and perhaps of God, began to wear into the firmness of a many-sided susceptible nature. Some vague indication that he might yield had been communicated to Pole by Soto before Christmas,* and the struggle which had evidently

CH. 33.

A.D. 1555.
December.
His fate is protracted.
He sees Ridley and Latimer die, and his courage begins to fail.

protest was committed to Pole to answer, who replied to it at length.

The authority of the Pope in a secular kingdom, the legate said, was no more a foreign power than 'the authority of the soul of man coming from heaven in the body generate on earth.' 'The Pope's laws spiritual did no other but that the soul did in the body, giving life to the same, confirming and strengthening the same;' 'and that it was which the angel signified in Christ's conception, declaring what his authority should be, that he should sit super domum David, which was a temporal reign, ut confirmet illud et corroboret, as the spiritual laws did.'

The quotation is inaccurate. The words in the Vulgate are, Dabit illi Dominus sedem David patris ejus : et regnabit in domo Jacob in æternum.

The letter contains another illustration of Pole's habit of mind. 'There was never spiritual man,'

he says, 'put to execution according to the order of the laws of the realm but he was first by the canon laws condemned and degraded; whereof there be as many examples afore the time of breaking the old order of the realm these last years, as hath been delinquents. Let the records be seen. And specially this is notable of the Bishop of —, which, being imprisoned for high treason, the king would not proceed to his condemnation and punishment afore he had the Pope's bull given him. . . .'

The historical argument proceeded smoothly up to the name, which, however, was not and is not to be found. Pole was probably thinking of Archbishop Scrope, who, however, unfortunately for the argument, was put to death without the Pope's sanction.—Draft of a Letter from Cardinal Pole to Cranmer: Harleian MSS. 417.

* Pole to Philip: Epistolæ, REG. POL., vol. v. p. 47.

CH. 33. commenced was permitted to protract itself. If the Archbishop of Canterbury, the father of the
 A.D. 1555.
 December. Reformed Church of England, could be brought to a recantation, that one victory might win back
 the hearts which the general constancy of the martyrs was drawing off in tens of thousands. Time, however, wore on, and the archbishop showed no definite signs of giving way. On the 14th of December, a mock trial was instituted at Rome; the report of the examination at Oxford was produced, and counsel were heard on both sides, or so it was pretended. Paul IV. then pronounced the final sentence, that Thomas Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury, having been accused
 by his sovereigns of divers crimes and misde-meanours, it had been proved against him that he had followed the teachings of John Wicliff and Martin Luther of accursed memory;* that he had published books containing matters of heresy, and still obstinately persisted in those
 his erroneous opinions: he was therefore declared to be anathema, to be deprived of his office, and having been degraded, he was to be delivered over to the secular arm.

His cause is heard at Rome, and
 he is sentenced by
 the Pope.

Feb. 14.
 Bonner and Thirlby
 carry the sentence to Oxford.

There was some delay in sending the judgment to England. It arrived at the beginning of February, and on the 14th, Thirlby and Bonner went down to finish the work at Oxford. The court sate this time in Christ Church Cathedral.
 Cranmer was brought to the bar, and the Papal sentence was read. The preamble declared that

* Damnatae memoriae. Sentence Definitive against Thomas Cranmer: FOXE, vol. viii.

the cause had been heard with indifference, that the accused had been defended by an advocate, that witnesses had been examined for him, that he had been allowed every opportunity to answer for himself. 'O Lord,' he exclaimed, 'what lies be these! that I, being in prison and never suffered to have counsel or advocate at home, should produce witness and appoint counsel at Rome; God must needs punish this shameless lying.'

CH. 33.
A. D. 1555.
December.

Silence would perhaps have been more dignified; to speak at all was an indication of infirmity. As soon as the reading was finished, the archbishop was formally arrayed in his robes, and when the decoration was completed, Bonner called out in exultation:

The archbishop is apparelled in his robes, and Bonner rails at him.

'This is the man that hath despised the Pope's Holiness, and now is to be judged by him; this is the man that hath pulled down so many churches, and now is come to be judged in a church; this is the man that hath contemned the blessed Sacrament of the altar, and now is come to be condemned before that blessed Sacrament hanging over the altar; this is the man that, like Lucifer, sat in the place of Christ upon an altar* to judge others, and now is come before an altar to be judged himself.†'

Thirlby checked the insolence of his companion. The degradation was about to commence, when the archbishop drew from his sleeve an appeal

* An allusion to a scaffold in St. Paul's Church, on which Cranmer had sate as a commisioner; said to have been erected over an old altar.
† Foxe, vol. viii. p. 73.

CH. 33.

A.D. 1556.

February.

He offers
an appeal
to the next
Free General
Council.But the appeal is refused,And he is degraded preparatory to execution.

'to the next Free General Council that should be called.' It had been drawn after consultation with a lawyer, in the evident hope that it might save or prolong his life,* and he attempted to present it to his judges. But he was catching at straws, as in his clearer judgment he would have known. Thirlby said sadly that the appeal could not be received; his orders were absolute to proceed.

The robes were stripped off in the usual way. The thin hair was clipped. Bonner with his own hands scraped the finger points which had been touched with the oil of consecration; 'Now are you lord no longer,' he said, when the ceremony was finished. 'All this needed not,' Cranmer answered; 'I had myself done with this gear long ago.'

He was led off in a beadle's threadbare gown, and a tradesman's cap; and here for some important hours authentic account of him is lost. What he did, what he said, what was done or what was said to him, is known only in its results, or in Protestant tradition. Tradition said that he was taken from the cathedral to the house of the Dean of Christ Church, where he was delicately entertained, and worked upon with smooth words, and promises of life. 'The noblemen,' he was told, 'bare him good-will; he was still strong, and might live many years, why should he cut them short?' The story may contain some elements of truth. But the same evening, certainly, he was again in his cell; and among the attempts to move him which can be authenticated, there was one of a far different kind; a letter addressed to him by Pole to bring him to a sense of his condition.

* Cranmer to a Lawyer : JENKINS, vol. i. p. 384.

CH. 33.

A.D. 1556.
February

‘Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ,’ so the legate addressed a prisoner in the expectation of death,* ‘hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son. If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed; for he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds. There are some who tell me that, in obedience to this command, I ought not to address you, or to have any dealings with you, save the dealings of a judge with a criminal. But Christ came not to judge only, but also to save; I call upon you, not to enter into your house, for so I should make myself a partaker with you; my desire is only to bring you back to the church which you have deserted.

The legate writes a letter to him.

‘You have corrupted Scripture, you have broken through the communion of saints, and now I tell you what you must do; I tell you, or rather not I, but Christ and the Church through me. Did I follow my own impulse, or did I speak in my own name, I should hold other language; to you I should not speak at all; I would address myself only to God; I would pray him to let fall the Speaking in the name of Christ, he urges the archbishop to repentance.

* Epist. REG. POL., vol. v. p. 248. I am obliged to abridge and epitomize.

CH. 33. fire of Heaven to consume you, and to consume
 with you the house into which you have entered in abandoning the Church.*

A.D. 1556.
 February.

He has followed the example,
 and used
 the instruments of
 the devil.

‘You pretend that you have used no instruments but reason, to lead men after you; what instrument did the devil use to seduce our parents in Paradise? you have followed the serpent; with guile you destroyed your king, the realm, and the Church, and you have brought to perdition thousands of human souls.

‘Compared with you, all others who have been concerned in these deeds of evil, are but objects
 of pity; many of them long resisted temptation,
 and yielded only to the seductions of your impious tongue; you made yourself a bishop,—for what purpose, but to mock both God and man?
 Your first act was but to juggle with your king,
 and you were no sooner Primate, than you plotted
 how you might break your oath to the Holy See;
 you took part in the counsels of the evil one,
 you made your home with the wicked, you sate
 in the seat of the scornful. You exhorted your king with your fine words, to put away his wife;
 you prated to him of his obligations to submit to the judgment of the Church;† and what has

He betrayed his king into wicked-
 ness,

* Car se je n'écoutois que les mouvemens de la nature, se je ne
 vous parlois qu'en mon nom, je vous tiendrois un autre langage,
 ou plutôt je ne vous dirois rien;
 je m'entretiendrois avec Dieu
 seul et je lui demanderois de faire
 tomber le feu du ciel pour vous
 consumer avec cette maison ou
 vous avez passé en abandonnant l'Eglise. The letter was only known to the editor of Pole's remains in a French translation. I do not know whether the original exists, or whether it was in Latin or in English.

† The innumerable modern writers who agree with Pole on the iniquity of the divorce of Catherine forget that, according followed that unrighteous sentence? You parted the king from the wife with whom he had lived for 20 years; you parted him from the Church, the common mother of the faithful; and thenceforth throughout the realm law has been trampled under foot, the people have been ground with tyranny, the churches pillaged, the nobility murdered one by the other.

CH. 33.
A.D. 1556.
February.

‘Therefore, I say, were I to make my own cries heard in heaven, I would pray God to demand at your hands the blood of his servants. Never had religion, never had the Church of Christ a worse enemy than you have been; now therefore, when you are about to suffer the just reward of your deeds, think no more to excuse yourself; confess your sins, like the penitent thief upon the cross.

And on him devolves the whole guilt of the schism in the Church.

‘Say not in your defence that you have done no violence, that you have been kind and gentle in your daily life. Thus I know men speak of you; but cheat not your conscience with so vain a plea. The devil, when called to answer for the souls that he has slain, may plead likewise that he did not desire their destruction; he thought only to make them happy, to give them pleasure, honour, riches—all things which their hearts desired. So did you with your king: you gave him the woman that he lusted after; you gave

to the rule which most of us now acknowledge, the marriage of Henry with his brother's wife really was incestuous—really was forbidden by the laws of God and nature; that the Pope	had no more authority to dispense with those laws then than he has now; and that if modern law is right, Cranmer did no more than his duty.
---	--

CH. 33. him the honour which was not his due, and the good things which were neither his nor yours;
 and, last and worst, you gave him poison, in covering his iniquities with a cloak of righteousness. Better, far better, you had offered him courtezans for companions; better you and he had been open thieves and robbers. Then he might have understood his crimes, and have repented of them; but you tempted him into the place where there is no repentance, no hope of salvation.

A.D. 1556.
 February.
 He deceived the king into a belief that he was doing right,
 and led him into hopeless
 perdition.

But Cranmer himself may still repent.

‘Turn then yourself, and repent. See yourself
 as you are. Thus may you escape your prison.
 Thus may you flee out of the darkness wherein you have hid yourself. Thus may you come back to light and life, and earn for yourself God’s forgiveness. I know not how to deal with you.
 Your examination at Oxford has but hardened you; yet the issue is with God. I at least can point out to you the way. If you, then, persist in your vain opinions, may God have mercy on you.’

The legate, in his office of guide, then travelled the full round of controversy, through Catholic tradition, through the doctrine of the Sacraments
 and of the real presence, where there is no need to follow him. At length he drew to his conclusion:

‘You will plead Scripture to answer me. Are you so vain, then, are you so foolish, as to suppose that it has been left to you to find out the meaning of those Scriptures which have been in the hands of the Fathers of the Church for so many ages? Confess, confess that you have mocked God in denying that he is present on the altar; wash out your sins with tears; and in the abundance of your sorrow you may find pardon. May it be so. Even for the greatness of your crimes may it be so, that God may have the greater glory. You have not, like others, fallen through simplicity, or fallen through fear. You were corrupted, like the Jews, by earthly rewards and promises. For your own profit you denied the presence of your Lord, and you rebelled against his servant the Pope. May you see your crimes. May you feel the greatness of your need of mercy. Now, even now, by my mouth, Christ offers you that mercy; and with the passionate hope which I am bound to feel for your salvation, I wait your answer to your Master's call.'

CH. 33.

A.D. 1556.
February.
If he will confess his sins, and throw himself humbly upon God's mercy, God will forgive him.

The exact day on which this letter reached the archbishop is uncertain, but it was very near the period of his sentence. He had dared death bravely while it was distant; but he was physically timid; the near approach of the agony which he had witnessed in others unnerved him; and in a moment of mental and moral prostration Cranmer may well have looked in the mirror which Pole held up to him, and asked himself whether, after all, the being there described was his true image — whether it was himself as others saw him. A faith which had existed for centuries, a faith in which generation after generation have lived happy and virtuous lives; a faith in which all good men are agreed, and

Cranmer, being neither arrogant nor fanatical, may have been attacked, in moments of despondency, by real doubt.

CH. 33. only the bad dispute,—such a faith carries an evidence and a weight with it beyond what can be looked for in a creed reasoned out by individuals—a creed which had the ban upon it of inherited execration; which had been held in abhorrence once by him who was now called upon to die for it. Only fools and fanatics believe that they cannot be mistaken. Sick misgivings may have taken hold upon him in moments of despondency, whether, after all, the millions who received the Roman supremacy might not be more right than the thousands who denied it;
 whether the argument on the real presence,
 which had satisfied him for fifty years, might not be better founded than his recent doubts. It is not possible for a man of gentle and modest nature to feel himself the object of intense detestation without uneasy pangs; and as such thoughts came and went, a window might seem to open, through which there was a return to life and freedom. His trial was not greater than hundreds of others had borne, and would bear
 with constancy; but the temperaments of men
 are unequally constituted, and a subtle intellect
 and a sensitive organization are not qualifications which make martyrdom easy.

His temperament was nervously
 sensitive.

He is afraid of death; he desires to save his life,

Life, by the law of the Church, by justice, by precedent, was given to all who would accept it on terms of submission. That the archbishop should be tempted to recant, with the resolution formed, notwithstanding, that he should still suffer, whether he yielded or whether he was obstinate, was a suspicion which his experience of the legate had not taught him to entertain.

CH. 33.

So it was that Cranmer's spirit gave way, and he who had disdained to fly when flight was open to him, because he considered that, having done the most in establishing the Reformation he was bound to face the responsibility of it, fell at last under the protraction of the trial.

A.D. 1556.
February.

The day of his degradation the archbishop had eaten little. In the evening he returned to his cell in a state of exhaustion: * the same night, or the next day, he sent in his first submission, † which was forwarded on the instant to the queen.

And he makes his submission.

It was no sooner gone than he recalled it, and then vacillating again, he drew a second, in slightly altered words, which he signed and did not recal. There had been a struggle in which the weaker nature had prevailed, and the orthodox leaders made haste to improve their triumph. The first step being over, confessions far more humiliating could now be extorted. Bonner came to his cell, and obtained from him a promise in writing, 'to submit to the king and queen in all their laws and ordinances, as well touching the Pope's supremacy as in all other things;' with an engagement further 'to move and stir all others to do the like,' and to live in

He recalls it, but again gives way,

And signs a second and a third recantation,

* JENKINS, vol. iv. p. 129.

† Forasmuch as the King's and Queen's Majesties, by consent of parliament, have received the Pope's authority within this realm, I am content to submit myself to their laws herein, and to take the Pope for chief head of this Church of England so far as God's laws and the customs of this realm will permit.

THOMAS CRANMER.

CH. 33. quietness and obedience, without murmur or
 A.D. 1556. grudging;’ his book on the Sacrament he would February. submit to the next general council.

And afterwards a fourth and
 a fifth.

These three submissions must have followed one another rapidly. On the 16th of February, two days only after his trial, he made a fourth, and yielding the point which he had reserved, he declared that he believed all the articles of the Christian religion as the Catholic Church believed. But so far he had spoken generally, and the court required particulars. In a fifth and longer submission,* he was made to anathematize particularly the heresies of Luther and Zuinglius; to accept the Pope as the head of the Church, out of which was no salvation; to acknowledge the real presence in the Eucharist, the seven sacraments as received by the Roman Catholics, and purgatory. He professed his penitence for having once held or taught otherwise, and he implored the prayers of all faithful Christians, that those whom he had seduced might be brought back to the true fold.

The demands of the Church might have been

* Of this fifth submission there is a contemporary copy among the MSS. at Corpus Christi College, Oxford. It was the only one known to Foxe; and this, with the fact of its being found in a separate form, gives a colour of probability to Mr. Southey’s suspicion that the rest were forgeries. The whole collection was published by Bonner, who injured his claims to credit by printing with the others a seventh recantation, which was never made, and by concealing the real truth. But the balance of evidence I still think is in favour of the genuineness of the first six. The first four lead up to the fifth, and the invention of them after the fifth had been made would have been needless. The sixth I agree with Strype in considering to have been composed by Pole, and signed by Cranmer.

satisfied by these last admissions; but Cranmer had not yet expiated his personal offences against the queen and her mother, and he was to drain the cup of humiliation to the dregs.

CH. 33.

A.D. 1556.
February.

A month was allowed to pass. He was left with the certainty of his shame, and the uncertainty whether, after all, it had not been encountered in vain. On the 18th of March, one more paper was submitted to his signature, in which he confessed to be all which Pole had described him. He called himself a blasphemer, and a persecutor; being unable to undo his evil work, he had no hope, he said, save in the example of the thief upon the cross, who, when other means of reparation were taken from him, made amends to God with his lips. He was unworthy of mercy, and he deserved eternal vengeance. He had sinned against King Henry and his wife; he was the cause of the divorce, from which, as from a seed, had sprung up schism, heresy, and crime; he had opened a window to false doctrines of which he had been himself the most pernicious teacher; especially he reflected with anguish that he had denied the presence of his Maker in the consecrated elements. He had deceived the living, and he had robbed the souls of the dead by stealing from them their masses. He prayed the Pope to pardon him; he prayed the king and queen to pardon him; he prayed God Almighty to pardon him, as He had pardoned Mary Magdalen; or to look upon him as, from his own cross, He had looked upon the thief.*

March 18.

After the lapse of a month he makes a last and more humiliating confession;

* Recantations of Thomas Cranmer: JENKINS, vol. iv. p. 393.

CH. 33. The most ingenious malice could invent no deeper degradation, and the archbishop might now die. One favour was granted to him alone of all the sufferers for religion—that he might speak at his death; speak, and, like Northumberland, perish with a recantation on his lips.

A.D. 1556. March. And having, as the court believed, finally disgraced himself, they determined to kill him in spite of his recantation.

The hatred against him was confined to the court. Even among those who had the deepest distaste for his opinions, his character had won affection and respect; and when it was known that he was to be executed, there was a widespread and profound emotion. ‘Although,’ says a Catholic who witnessed his death, ‘his former life and wretched end deserved a greater misery, if any greater might have chanced to him; yet, setting aside his offence to God and his country, beholding the man without his faults, I think there was none that pitied not his case and bewailed not his fortune, and feared not his own chance, to see so noble a prelate, so grave a councillor, of so long-continued honours, after so many dignities, in his old years to be deprived of his estate, adjudged to die, and in so painful a death to end his life.’*

On Saturday, the 21st of March, Lord Williams was again ordered into Oxford to keep the peace, with Lord Chandos, Sir Thomas Brydges, and other gentlemen of the county. If they allowed themselves to countenance by their presence the scene which they were about to witness, it is to be remembered that but a few years since, these same gentlemen had seen Catholic priests swinging from the pinnacles of their churches. The memory of the evil days was still recent, and amidst the tumult of conflicting passions, no one could trust his neighbour, and organized resistance was impracticable.

* Death of Cranmer, related by a Bystander: Harleian MSS., 442. Printed, with some inaccuracies, by STEYRE.

CH. 33.

A.D. 1556.
March 21.

The March morning broke wild and stormy. The sermon intended to be preached at the stake was adjourned, in consequence of the wet, to St. Mary's, where a high stage was erected, on which Cranmer was to stand conspicuous. Peers, knights, doctors, students, priests, men-at-arms, and citizens, thronged the narrow aisles, and through the midst of them the archbishop was led in by the mayor. As he mounted the platform many of the spectators were in tears. He knelt and prayed silently, and Cole, the Provost of Eton, then took his place in the pulpit.

The morning being wet, the sermon is preached at St. Mary's.

Although, by a strained interpretation of the law, it could be pretended that the time of grace had expired with the trial; yet, to put a man to death at all after recantation was a proceeding so violent and unusual, that some excuse or some explanation was felt to be necessary.

Cole therefore first declared why it was expedient that the late archbishop should suffer, notwithstanding his reconciliation. One reason was 'for that he had been a great causer of all the alterations in the realm of England; and when the matter of the divorce between King Henry VIII. and Queen Catherine was commenced in the court of Rome, he, having nothing to do with it, sate upon it as a judge, which was

The preacher explains the causes which determined the court to execute the archbishop.

CH. 33. the entry to all the inconvenients which followed.' 'Yet in that Mr. Cole excused him—that A.D. 1556. he thought he did it, not out of malice, but by March 21. the persuasion and advice of certain learned men.'

Another occasion was, 'for that he had been the great setter forth of all the heresy received into the Church in the latter times; had written in it, had disputed, had continued it even to the last hour; and it had never been seen in the time of schism that any man continuing so long had been pardoned, and that it was not to be remitted for example's sake.'

'And other causes,' Cole added, 'moved the queen and council thereto, which were not meet and convenient for every one to understand.'*

He makes
the archbishop the text of an exhortation
to the audience.

The explanations being finished, the preacher exhorted his audience to take example, from the spectacle before them, to fear God, and to learn that there was no power against the Lord. There, in their presence, stood a man, once 'of so high degree—sometime one of the chief prelates of the Church—an archbishop, the chief of the council, the second person of the realm: of long time, it might be thought, in great assurance, a king on his side;' and now, 'notwith-

* Narrative of the Execution of Thomas Cranmer: MS. Harleian, 422. Another account gives, among the causes which Cole mentioned, that 'it seemed meet, according to the law of equality, that, as the death of the Duke of Northumberland of late made even with Sir Thomas More, Chancellor, that died for the Church, so there should be one that should make even with Fisher, Bishop of Rochester; and because that Ridley, Hooper, and Ferrars were not able to make even with that man, it seemed that Cranmer should be joined with them to fill up their part of equality.'—FOXE, vol. viii. p. 85. JENKINS, vol. iv. p. 133.

standing all his authority and defence, debased from a high estate unto a low degree—of a councillor become a caitiff, and set in so wretched estate that the poorest wretch would not change conditions with him.'

CH. 33.

A.D. 1556.
March 21.

Turning, in conclusion, to Cranmer himself, Cole then 'comforted and encouraged him to take his death well by many places in Scripture; bidding him nothing mistrust but that he should incontinently receive that the thief did, to whom Christ said, To-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise. Out of Paul he armed him against the terrors of fire, by the words, The Lord is faithful, and will not suffer you to be tempted beyond that which you are able to bear; by the example of the three Children, to whom God made the flame seem like a pleasant joy; by the rejoicing of St. Andrew on his cross; by the patience of St. Lawrence on the fire.' He dwelt upon his conversion, which, he said, was the special work of God, because so many efforts had been made by men to work upon him, and had been made in vain. God, in his own time, had reclaimed him, and brought him home.

He congratulates the archbishop himself on his conversion,

A dirge, the preacher said, should be sung for him in every church in Oxford; he charged all the priests to say each a mass for the repose of his soul; and finally, he desired the congregation present to kneel where they were, and pray for him.

And promises him the prayers of the Church.

The whole crowd fell on their knees, the archbishop with them; and 'I think,' says the eyewitness,* 'that there was never such a number so

* MS. Harleian, 422.

CH. 33. earnestly praying together; for they that hated him before, now loved him for his conversion, and hopes of continuance: they that loved him before could not suddenly hate him, having hope of his confession; so love and hope increased devotion
 on every side.'

A.D. 1556.
 March 21.

'I shall not need,' says the same writer, 'to describe his behaviour for the time of sermon, his sorrowful countenance, his heavy cheer, his face bedewed with tears; sometimes lifting his eyes to heaven in hope, sometimes casting them down to the earth for shame—to be brief, an image of sorrow, the dolour of his heart bursting out of his eyes, retaining ever a quiet and grave behaviour, which increased the pity in men's hearts.'

The archbishop is then invited to speak.

His own turn to speak was now come. When the prayer was finished, the preacher said, 'Lest any man should doubt the sincerity of this man's repentance, you shall hear him speak before you.—I pray you, Master Cranmer,' he added, turning to him, 'that you will now perform that you promised not long ago; that you would openly express the true and undoubted profession of your faith.'

'I will do it,' the archbishop answered.

'Good Christian people,' he began, 'my dear, beloved brethren and sisters in Christ, I beseech you most heartily to pray for me to Almighty God, that he will forgive me all my sins and offences, which be many and without number, and great above measure; one thing grieveth my conscience more than all the rest, whereof, God willing, I shall speak more; but how many or how great soever they be, I beseech you to pray God of his mercy to pardon and forgive them all.' CH. 33.

Falling again on his knees:—

A.D. 1556.
March 21.

'O Father of heaven,' he prayed, 'O Son of God, Redeemer of the world; O Holy Ghost, three Persons and one God, have mercy upon me, most wretched caitiff and miserable sinner. I have offended both heaven and earth more than my tongue can express; whither then may I go, or whither should I flee for succour? To heaven I am ashamed to lift up mine eyes, and in earth I find no succour nor refuge. What shall I do? Shall I despair? God forbid! Oh, good God, thou art merciful, and refusest none that come to thee for succour. To thee, therefore, do I come; to thee do I humble myself, saying, O Lord, my sins be great, yet have mercy on me for thy great mercy. The mystery was not wrought that God became man, for few or little offences. Thou didst not give thy Son, O Father, for small sins only, but for all and the greatest in the world, so that the sinner return to thee with a penitent heart, as I do at this present. Wherefore have mercy upon me, O Lord, whose property is always to have mercy; although my sins be great, yet is thy mercy greater; wherefore have mercy upon me, O Lord, for thy great mercy. I crave nothing, O Lord, for mine own merits, but for thy Name's sake, and, therefore, O Father of heaven, hallowed be thy Name.'

The arch-
bishop's
prayer.

Then rising, he went on with his address:—

'Every man desireth, good people, at the time

CH. 33. of his death, to give some good exhortation that others may remember after his death, and be the better thereby; for one word spoken of a man at his last end* will be more remembered than the sermons made of them that live and remain. So I beseech God grant me grace, that I may speak something at my departing whereby God may be glorified and you edified.

A.D. 1556.
March 21.
He gives
the audience a few general
exhorta-
tions
against the vices of the time—

Against the love of the world—

‘But it is an heavy case to see that many folks be so doted upon the love of this false world, and be so careful for it, that of the love of God or the world to come, they seem to care very little or nothing; therefore this shall be my first exhortation,—that you set not overmuch by this glozing world, but upon God and the world to come; and learn what this lesson meaneth which St. John teacheth, that the love of the world is hatred against God.

Against
rebellion—

‘The second exhortation is, that next unto God, you obey your king and queen willingly, without murmur or grudging, not for fear of them only, but much more for the fear of God, knowing that they be God’s ministers, appointed

* Shakspeare was perhaps thinking of this speech of Cranmer, when he wrote the magnificent lines which he placed in the mouth of the dying Gaunt:—

‘O, but they say, the tongues of dying men
Enforce attention, like deep harmony :
Where words are scarce, they are seldom spent in vain :
For they breathe truth, that breathe their words in pain.
He, that no more must say, is listened more
Than they whom youth and ease have taught to gloze ;
More are men’s ends marked, than their lives before :
The setting sun, and music at the close,
As the last taste of sweets, is sweetest last ;
Writ in remembrance more than things long past.’

of God to rule and govern you, and therefore whosoever resisteth them resisteth God's ordinance.

CH. 33.

A.D. 1556.
March 21.

'The third exhortation is, that you live all together like brethren and sisters: but, alas!
pity it is to see what contention and hatred one man hath against another, not taking each other for brethren and sisters, but rather as strangers and mortal enemies. But I pray you learn and bear well away the lesson, to do good to all men
as much as in you lieth, and hurt no man no more than you would hurt your own natural brother or sister. For this you may be sure,
that whosoever hateth his brother or sister,
and goeth about maliciously to hinder or hurt
him, surely, and without all doubt, God is not with that man, although he think himself never so much in God's favour.

Against
discord and division—

'The fourth exhortation shall be to them that have great substance and riches of this world,
that they may well consider and weigh these three sayings of the Scriptures. One is of our Saviour Christ himself, who saith that it is a hard thing for a rich man to come to heaven; a sore saying, and spoken of Him that knoweth
the truth. The second is of St. John, whose saying is this: He that hath the substance of this world, and seeth his brother in necessity, and shutteth up his compassion and mercy from him, how can he say he loveth God? The third is of St. James, who speaketh to the covetous and rich men after this manner: Weep and howl for the misery which shall come upon you; your

And
against
love of riches.

CH. 33. riches doth rot, your clothes be moth-eaten, your gold and silver is cankered and rusty, and the rust thereof shall bear witness against you, and consume you like fire; you gather and hoard up treasure of God's indignation against the last day. I tell them which be rich, ponder these sentences; for if ever they had occasion to show their charity, they have it now at this present; the poor people being so many, and victuals so dear; for although I have been long in prison, yet have I heard of the great penury of the poor.'

A.D. 1556.
March 21.

The people listened breathless, 'intending upon the conclusion.'

Then, feeling himself on the edge of eternity, he will confess his true faith,

'And now,' he went on, 'forasmuch as I am come to the last end of my life, whereupon hangeth all my life past and all my life to come, either to live with my Saviour Christ in joy, or else to be ever in pain with wicked devils in hell; and I see before mine eyes presently either heaven'—and he pointed upwards with his hand—'or hell,' and he pointed downwards, 'ready to swallow me. I shall therefore declare unto you my very faith, without colour or dissimulation; for now it is no time to dissemble. I believe in God the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth; in every article of the Catholic faith; every word and sentence taught by our Saviour Christ, his apostles, and prophets, in the Old and New Testament.

And disburden his conscience of its load.

'And now I come to the great thing that troubleth my conscience more than any other thing that ever I said or did in my life, and that is the setting abroad of writings contrary to the truth, which here I now renounce and refuse,* as things written with my hand contrary to the truth which I thought in my heart, and written for fear of death to save my life, if it might be; and that is, all such bills and papers as I have written and signed with my hand since my de-

CH. 33.

A.D. 1556.
March 21.
He had written, in fear of death, things which he did not believe.

* There are two original contemporary accounts of Cranmer's words—Harleian MSS., 417 and 422,—and they agree so far almost word for word with 'The Prayer and Saying of Thomas Cranmer a little before his Death,' which was published immediately after by Bonner. But we now encounter the singular difficulty, that the conclusion given by Bonner is altogether different. The archbishop is made to repeat his recantation, and express especial grief for the books which he had written upon the Sacrament.

There is no uncertainty as to what Cranmer really said; but, inasmuch as Bonner at the head of his version of the speech has described it as 'written with his own hand,' it has been inferred that he was required to make a copy of what he intended to say,—that he actually wrote what Bonner printed, hoping to the end that his life would be spared; and that he would have repeated it publicly, had he seen that there was a chance of his escape. Finding, however, that his execution had been irrevocably determined on, he made the substitution at the last moment.

There are many difficulties in this view, chiefly from the character of the speech itself, which has the stamp upon it of too evident sincerity to have been composed with any underhand intentions. The tone is in harmony throughout, and the beginning leads naturally to the conclusion which Cranmer really spoke.

There is another explanation, which is to me more credible. The Catholics were furious at their expected triumph being snatched from them. Whether Cranmer did or did not write what Bonner says he wrote, Bonner knew that he had not spoken it, and yet was dishonest enough to print it as having been spoken by him, evidently hoping that the truth could be suppressed, and that the Catholic cause might escape the injury which the archbishop's recovered constancy must inflict upon it. A man who was capable of so considerable a falsehood would not have hesitated for the same good purpose to alter a few sentences. Pious frauds have been committed by more religious men than Edmund Bonner. See the Recantation of Thomas Cranmer, reprinted from Bonner's original pamphlet: JENKINS, vol. iv. p. 393.

CH. 33. gradation, wherein I have written many things
 A.D. 1556. untrue; and forasmuch as my hand offended in March 21. writing contrary to my heart, my hand therefore shall first be punished; for if I may come to the
 He abhors fire, it shall be the first burnt. As for the Pope, the Pope as I utterly refuse him, as Christ's enemy and Anti-Antichrist. christ, with all his false doctrine; and as for the Sacrament, I believe as I have taught in my book against the Bishop of Winchester.'

He is not allowed to proceed
 further,
 and is carried off to
 the stake.

So far the archbishop was allowed to continue, before his astonished hearers could collect themselves. 'Play the Christian man,' Lord Williams at length was able to call; 'remember yourself; do not dissemble.' 'Alas! my Lord,' the archbishop answered, 'I have been a man that all my life loved plainness, and never dissembled till now, which I am most sorry for.' He would have gone on; but cries now rose on all sides, 'Pull him down,' 'Stop his mouth,' 'Away with him,' and he was borne off by the throng out of the church. The stake was a quarter of a mile distant, at the spot already consecrated by the deaths of Ridley and Latimer. Priests and monks 'who did rue* to see him go so wickedly to his death, ran after him, exhorting him, while time was, to remember himself.' But Cranmer, having flung down the burden of his shame, had recovered his strength, and such words had no longer power to trouble him. He approached the stake with 'a cheerful countenance,' undressed in haste, and stood upright in his shirt. Soto and another Spanish friar continued expostulating; but finding they could effect nothing, one said in Latin to the other, 'Let us go from him, for the devil is within him.' An Oxford theologian—his name was Ely—being more clamorous, drew from him only the answer that, as touching his recantation, 'he repented him right sore, because he knew that it was against the truth.'

* Harleian MS., 422. Strype has misread the word into 'run,' losing the point of the expression.

CH. 33.

A.D. 1556.
March 21.

'Make short, make short!' Lord Williams cried hastily.

Cranmer's
death,

The archbishop shook hands with his friends; Ely only drew back, calling, 'Recant, recant,' and bidding others not approach him.

'This was the hand that wrote it,' Cranmer said, extending his right arm; 'this was the hand that wrote it, therefore it shall suffer first punishment.' Before his body was touched, he held the offending member steadily in the flame, 'and never stirred nor cried.' The wood was dry and mercifully laid; the fire was rapid at its work, and he was soon dead. 'His friends,' said a Catholic bystander, 'sorrowed for love, his enemies for pity, strangers for a common kind of humanity, whereby we are bound to one another.'

So perished Cranmer. He was brought out, with the eyes of his soul blinded, to make sport for his enemies, and in his death he brought upon them a wider destruction than he had effected by his teaching while alive. Pole was appointed the next day to the see of Canterbury; but in other respects the court had overreached them.

And the consequences of
his death.

CH. 33. selves by their cruelty. Had they been contented to accept the recantation, they would have left the archbishop to die broken-hearted, pointed at by the finger of pitying scorn; and the Reformation
would have been disgraced in its champion.
They were tempted, by an evil spirit of revenge,
into an act unsanctioned even by their own bloody laws; and they gave him an opportunity of redeeming his fame, and of writing his name in the roll of martyrs. The worth of a man must be measured by his life, not by his failure under a single and peculiar trial. The Apostle, though forewarned, denied his Master on the first alarm
of danger; yet that Master who knew his nature
in its strength and its infirmity, chose him for the rock on which He would build His Church.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

CALAIS.

NOT far from Abingdon, on the London road, CH. 34.
was a house belonging to a gentleman named A.D. 1556.
Christopher Ashton. Here, on their way to and January.
fro between the western counties and the capital,
members of parliament, or other busy persons,
whom the heat of the times tempted from their homes, occasionally called; and the character of the conversation which was to be heard in that house, may be gathered from the following depositions. On the 4th of January, Sir Nicholas Arnold looked in, and found Sir Henry Dudley
there.

‘Well, Sir Nicholas, what news?’ said Ashton. Malcontent

‘None worth hearing,’ Arnold answered. members of

‘I am sure you hear they go about a corona- parliament
tion,’ Dudley said. and others

‘I hear no such matter,’ said Arnold. ‘The meet and news that are worth the hearing, are in such talk over
men’s heads that will not utter them, and the the news.
rest are not to be credited.’*

* Saying of, Sir Nicholas Arnold: MS. Mary, Domestic,
vol. vii.

CH. 34.

A.D. 1556.
February.

‘There be news come out of Flanders, as I heard from Sir Peter Mewtas,’ said Ashton, laughing, to another visitor:* ‘The king has written to the queen that he will not come hither a great while, or, as men think, any more; and the queen was in a rage, and caused the king’s picture to be carried out of the privy chamber, and she in a wonderful storm, and could not be in any wise quieted.’†

‘They have put me in the Tower for their pleasures,’ said Sir Anthony Kingston; ‘but so shall they never do more.’‡

At another time Sir Henry Peckham was alone with Ashton. Peckham§ had been one of the sharers in the forfeited estates of the Duke of Norfolk. He was obliged to relinquish his grant, with but small compensation, and he complained of his treatment. Ashton bade him ‘be of good cheer.’

‘If you will keep my counsel,’ Ashton said, ‘I will tell you news that will bring your land again or it be long.’

* The conversations with Ashton were sometimes at his own house; sometimes at an inn by the waterside, near Lambeth; sometimes at other places. The localities are not always easy to make out.

† Deposition of Thomas White: MS., Mary, Domestic, vol. vii.

‡ Wotton to the Queen, cypher: French MSS., bundle 13. State Paper Office. Kingston was one of the members of the House of Commons who was imprisoned at the close of the late session, for the freedom of his language in parliament. He was ‘Vice-admiral of the Ports about the Severn,’ and a man of large influence in the Welsh Marches.

§ Younger son of Sir Edward Peckham, Cofferer of the Household, and Member of Council under Edward VI.

Peckham promised to be secret.

CH. 34.

‘Sir Anthony Kingston,’ Ashton continued, ‘and a great many of the western gentlemen, are in a confederacy to send the Queen’s Highness over to the king, and make the Lady Elizabeth queen, and to marry the Earl of Devonshire to the said Lady Elizabeth. The laws of the realm will bear it, that they may do it justly; and Sir Anthony Kingston hath required me to hearken to King Henry VIII.’s will; for there is sufficient matter for our purpose, as Sir Anthony doth tell me. I pray, if you can, help me to it.’

A.D. 1556.
February.
Another
conspiracy
is formed
to dethrone
the queen.

Peckham said it was to be had in the Rolls. Ashton did not like to put himself in the way of suspicion by asking to see it publicly, and begged Peckham to obtain a copy for him elsewhere.

‘I will show you a token,’ he then said, and took out half a broken penny; ‘the other half is with Sir Anthony, and whensoever I do send this same to Sir Anthony, then will he be in readiness with ten thousand men within three days upon receipt of this token.’ If Lord Pembroke’s men made resistance on the Marches, Kingston would cut them off, and would be in London in twenty days at furthest. And ‘when this is done,’ Ashton continued, ‘your father shall be made a duke; for I tell you true, that the Lady Elizabeth is a jolly liberal dame, and nothing so unthankful as her sister is; and she taketh this liberality of her mother, who was one of the bountifullest women in all her time or since; and

The
western gentlemen
will march
on London,
and make Elizabeth
queen.

CH. 34. then shall men of good service and gentlemen
be esteemed.'

A.D. 1556.
February.

Peckham, who had not anticipated so dangerous a confidence, looked grave and uneasy; Ashton said he hoped he would not betray him. 'No,' Peckham answered, and gave him his hand with his promise.

'I will tell you more, then,' his friend went on; 'we shall have that will take our part, the Earl of Westmoreland, who will not come alone, and we shall have my Lord Williams.'*

'That cannot be,' Peckham said; 'he hath served the queen right well, and by her Highness was made lord.'

'I can better tell than you,' Ashton answered; 'the Lord Williams is a good fellow, and is as unthankfully dealt with as you, Sir Henry. I tell you that he is sure on our side; and Sir Henry Dudley hath spoken with all the gentlemen that be soldiers, that be about the town, and they be all sure ours, so that we have left the queen never a man of war that is worth a button.'†

Meeting of
disaffected
members
of parliament
at Arun-
del's,

The scene changes. Readers of the earlier volumes of this history will remember Arundel's, in Lawrence Poultny-lane, where Lord Surrey and his friends held their nightly festivities. Times had changed, and so had Arundel's. It was now the resort of the young Liberal members of parliament, where the Opposition tactics CH. 34.

* Lord Williams of Thame, who superintended the executions of Ridley, Latimer, and Cranmer.

† Confession of Sir Henry Peckham: Mary, Domestic, MS., vol. viii.

in the House of Commons were discussed and settled upon. Here during the late session had A.D. 1556.
met the men whose names have been mentioned February.
in the preceding conversation, and who had crossed the queen's purposes; Kingston, Peckham, Ashton, Dudley, and with them Sir John Perrot, Sir William Courtenay, Sir Hugh Pollard,
Sir John Chichester, and two young Tremaynes of Colacombe in Devonshire, one of whom had been concerned with Wyatt and Carew. Here also came John Daniel, in the service at one time of Lord Northampton, who, not being in parliament, was excluded from the more private consultations, but heard much of the general talk; And the
'how they, with great wilfulness, as might be conversation which perceived by their behaviour, did sore mislike was to be such Catholic proceedings as they saw the queen heard went about, and did intend to resist such matters there.
as should be spoken of in the parliament house
other than liked them.'*

The party broke up with the dissolution. Some of them, however, came back to London, and Daniel, one afternoon in March, was waiting for John his dinner in the public room, when a ruffling Daniel and cavalier named Ned Horsey, came in, humming Ned
a catch of 'Good man priest, now beware your Horsey.
pallet,' 'and bringing out a rhyme thereto of
'Fire and faggot,' and 'helm and sallet.''

'I desire to live no longer than Whitsuntide
next,' Horsey said to Daniel; 'for if I live so

* Confession of John Daniel: MS. Mary, Domestic, vol. viii.

CH. 34. long, I mistrust not but my deeds shall be chronicled.'

A.D. 1556.
March.

'Tush, my boy,' he went on, 'be of good cheer; for when thou shalt hear what the matter is, thou wilt take up thy hand and bless thee, and marvel that such young heads could ever bring such a matter as this to pass. I tell thee, the matter hath been a-brewing this quarter of a year at least, when thou wast in the country like a lout. Well, well, man, we shall either be men shortly, or no men; yea, and that very shortly, too.'

'Tell me what you mean,' said Daniel.

'Alas! good lout,' quoth Horsey, 'and do you not know, I pray you? hath not Harry Dudley told you of it?'

'No, by the faith of a Christian man,' said Daniel, 'Harry Dudley told me nothing except that he was going into France. But I pray thee, good Ned Horsey, tell me.'

'By God's blood!' said Horsey, 'then I will not tell you; for we have all taken an oath on the Testament, that no man should break it to any man, except as told first by Harry Dudley.'

Horsey went on to talk of preparations, in which Daniel had been concerned, for an expedition to Southampton. Daniel, being a man of property, had undertaken to provide the horses, and had deposited a sum of money for the purpose; but, from Horsey's words, he perceived that schemes were on foot, which, having something to lose, he had better keep clear of. 'His heart,' he said, 'rys in his body as big as a loaf;' he left the table, went down into the garden, and walked up and down an alley to collect himself; at last he ran into an arbour, where he knelt and said his prayers.

‘What, man!’ said Sir John Harrington, looking in, ‘you are well occupied on your knees so soon after dinner.’

Daniel made up his mind that his friends were bringing him into a fool’s paradise; ‘as they did brew, so they should bake for him,’ he thought, ‘and those heads that had studied it before he came to town should work the end of it.’ He stole away, therefore, and crossed the river to Southwark, where he took into his confidence a surgeon named Blacklock. Daniel pretended a broken leg, which Blacklock pretended to set: and thus the expedition to Southampton went off without him; the object of it being the despatch of one of the party into France, and the arrangement of the details of the conspiracy with the Captain of the Isle of Wight.

The characters of the persons who were concerned in this new plot against Mary’s throne will not require much further elucidation. Sir Henry Dudley was Northumberland’s cousin—the same who had been employed by the duke as an agent with the French court; the rest were eager, headstrong, not very wise young men, who, in the general indignation of the country at the barbarity of the government, saw an opportunity of pushing themselves into distinction. Lord Willoughby, Lord Westmoreland, and Lord Oxford were suspected by the queen of being unsound in religion; they had been reprimanded,

CH. 34.

A.D. 1556.

March.

John Daniel’s
heart troubles him,

And he tries to clear himself from dangerous
companions.

CH. 34. and Oxford was thought likely to lose his lands.*
 A.D. 1556. If the first move could be made successfully, the March. conspirators counted on general support from these noblemen, and indeed from the whole body of the lay peers.

A duplicate of Wyatt's conspiracy
 is formed
 in concert
 with the French.

The Isle of Wight to be betrayed
 to the French.

The conspirators
 swear to stand by one
 another,
 and to make no
 confession.

The plan was identical with that of Wyatt and Suffolk and Carew. Kingston was to march on London from Wales, and the force of the western counties was to join him on the Severn. One of the Throgmortons, called 'Long John,' had been at the French court, and made arrangements with Henry. Throgmorton returned to England, and Henry Dudley crossed the Channel in his place. The French promised to supply ships and money, while Dudley undertook to furnish them with crews from among the refugees or the western privateers, as Carew had done two years before. The Captain of the Isle of Wight, Uvedale, undertook to betray the island and Hurst Castle to the French. Dudley was to attack Portsmouth, where he would find the cannon 'pegged;† and when Portsmouth was taken, Hampshire, Sussex, and Kent were expected to rise.

Although known to so many persons, the secret was well kept. On Dudley's disappearance, inquiries were made about him. It was pretended that he was in debt, and had gone abroad to escape from his creditors. Some suspicion attached to the Tremaynes, who had long been connected with the privateers at Scilly. Strangways, the pirate, happened to be taken prisoner, and told something to the council about them which led to their arrest; but though the matter was 'true enough,' they bore down their accuser by mere courageous audacity of denial; and their resolution and fidelity were held up as an example in the secret meetings of the conspirators.*

* Noailles to the King of France, March 12; Ambassades, vol. v.

† Uvedale's Confession: Mary, Domestic, MS., vol. vii.; Peckham's Confession, vol. viii.

CH. 34.
A.D. 1556.
March.

The active co-operation of France was an essential element in the chances of success. From France, however, it became suddenly uncertain whether assistance was to be looked for. The English mediation in the European war had failed, because, after Mary's disappointment, France refused to part with Savoy; and the Emperor could not bring himself to make a peace where the sacrifices would be wholly on his own side. But the negotiations between the principals were never wholly let fall; the Emperor

* John Throgmorton said to Bedell, Derick, and me, on this wise: 'Whatsoever becomes of any of us in this dangerous enterprise, we will here promise, that albeit I, you, and your nannye, every of us, by name, should accuse any of us of this, or any part touching this enterprise, bye and bye to revile him with most taunting and naughty rebukes that may be devised. And thereby setting a stern countenance, and for our couraging and better comfort herein, he shewed us of a matter that was most true, and accused by Strangways against two brethren, meaning [the] Tremaynes, who being but little men in personage, so reviled Strangways, accusing them before your honours, that because Strangways had no further proof but his only saying, and they so stoutly denying it, even to the threatening of the rack (or whether they were anything thereto constrained or no, as he said, I do not perfectly remember); but at length Strangways was in effect ready to weep, and think he had accused them wrongfully, and so they dismissed, and Strangways much of your honours rebuked.'—Thomas White to the Council: MS. Mary, Domestic, vol. vii.

CH. 34. had now resigned. Philip, with an embarrassed treasury, with his eye on the English crown, and with trouble threatening him from the Turks, was anxious to escape from the exhausting conflict; and at the beginning of February a truce for five years was concluded at Vaucelles, by which Henry was left in undisturbed possession of all his conquests.

A.D. 1556.

March.

A truce of five years is agreed to between France and Spain, on terms favourable to the former.

The King of France, however, desires to keep the conspirators in hand.

Terms so advantageous to the court of France could not be rejected; but past experience forbade, nevertheless, any very sanguine hope that the truce would last out its term. Unquestionably, in the opinion of the French king, it would be broken without scruple could Philip obtain the active help of England; and Henry would not, therefore, relinquish his correspondence with the conspirators. He instructed Noailles only to keep them quiet for the present till Philip's intentions should be revealed more clearly.*

The 'young heads,' of whom Horsey had spoken to Daniel, were not, however, men whom it was easy to keep quiet. Noailles replied, that they were so anxious to make an effort for liberty, and felt so certain of success, that he found great difficulty in restraining them; if the King of France would give them some slight assistance at the outset,† they undertook to do the rest themselves.

Dudley, therefore, remained in France, whither he was followed by Ashton and Horsey, and Henry

* The Constable to Noailles, Feb. 7: Ambassades, vol. v. .

† De leur prêter un peu d'espaule.

admitted them to a midnight audience. He said that, for the moment, he could not act with them openly; but he would throw no difficulty in their way; if they were as strong as they professed to be (and they said that members of the Privy Council were in the confederacy), he would have them go forward with their project; and if he found Philip occupied, as he expected that he would be, with the Turks in Hungary, he would assist them with men, money, and other things. Meanwhile, he gave Dudley 1500 crowns, distributed considerable sums among his companions, and advised them to go, as Carew had done before, to the coast of Normandy, and keep up their communications with their friends.

CH. 34.

A.D. 1556.

March.

He gives them private encouragement, and assists them with money;

If circumstances favour, he will help them openly.

The interview and the promises of Henry were betrayed to Wotton, and by him reported in cypher to Mary;* but the fear or treachery of one of the party had already placed the government in possession of information, as the first step was about to be taken. Fifty thousand pounds were in the Treasury: to embarrass the court, and to provide the insurrection with funds, a party of four or five—Rosey, keeper of the Star Chamber, Heneage, an officer of the chapel royal, a man named Derick, and one or two others—were chosen to carry off the money. Before the enterprise could be undertaken, Thomas White—perhaps one of the five, in alarm at the danger—communicated with the council; and on the 18th of March, Throgmorton, Peckham,

The conspirators propose to rob the Treasury.

* Wotton to the Queen: French MSS., bundle 13.

CH. 34. Daniel, Rosey, and twelve or fourteen others, were seized suddenly, and sent to the Tower. Dudley was traced to Southampton; he was himself beyond pursuit, but Uvedale was discovered, and brought to London; Kingston was sent for, but died on his way up from Wales, probably by his own hand, in despair.

A.D. 1556.
March.
Their secrets are betrayed to the Government, and those who are in England are arrested.

Information was, of course, the great object of the court; and they would shrink from nothing which would enable them to extort confessions. The prisoners knew what was before them, and prepared themselves according to their courage.

Throgmorton, when locked into the room which was allotted to him in the Tower, found that Derick was in the chamber underneath. He loosened a board in the floor, and 'required him that in any case, he should not be the destruction of others besides himself;' 'for look,' Throgmorton said, 'how many thou dost accuse, so many thou dost wilfully murder.'

The prisoners anticipate torture.

Derick, it seems, was already thinking whether he could not, perhaps, save his own life. None of the party as yet knew how much of their secret had been discovered, or the value, therefore, which the government would place upon a full confession.

'He would do nothing,' Derick answered, 'but that which God had appointed; and if God would that he should do it, there was no remedy.'

When a man has made up his mind that it is God's will that he should be a rogue, he has small chance of recovering himself. Throgmor-

ton tried to reason him into manliness, and thought he had succeeded. Derick even promised to 'abide the torture,' 'whereupon Master Throgmorton did sup his porridge to him, in token of his truth.' But the torture was used or threatened, and Derick did not 'abide' it; promises of pardon were also used, which the prisoners knew to mean nothing, and yet were worked on by them.*

CH. 34.
A.D. 1556.
March.

Further confessions
are extorted.

Derick turned approver, so did Rosey, so did Bedyll: Uvedale, who was ill and feeble, yielded to the rack; and, piece by piece, the whole conspiracy was drawn out. The investigation was committed exclusively to the queen's clique, Rochester, Englefield, Waldegrave, Jerningham, and Hastings. The rest of the council refused to meddle,† for reasons which, perhaps, the queen hoped to learn from one or other of the prisoners. Throgmorton, however, who could tell the most, would tell nothing, though the rack was used freely to open his lips. How much he suffered may be gathered from a few words which he used to a Mr. Walpole, who was one of his examiners.

The council generally refuse
to connect themselves
with the prosecution.

'Tell me, I pray you, Mr. Walpole,' he said, 'if the council may rack me, or put me to torment, after the time I am condemned, or no?'

* Although they be promised by your means to move the Queen's Majesty to be gracious lady to them, they know that it is not so meant; but to suck out of others all ye may, and yet thereby to have no mercy shewed.—Thomas White to the Council: MS. Mary, Domestic, vol. vii.

† Robert Swift to Lord Shrewsbury: LODGE'S Illustrations, vol. i.

CH. 34.

A.D. 1556.

April.

Throgmorton will not yield, either to torture or promise of pardon.

‘They may,’ Walpole answered, ‘if it shall please them.’

‘Then,’ said Throgmorton, ‘I fear I shall be put to it again; and, I will assure you, it is terrible pain.’*

When torture would not answer, promises were tried, and promises apparently of an emphatic kind.

‘I pray you, pray for me,’ Throgmorton said to his brother prisoners; ‘for I shall not be long with you. I cannot live without I should be the death of a number of gentlemen; and therewithal the said Throgmorton recited a story of the Romans, commending much an old man that was taken prisoner by the enemy, whom the Romans would have redeemed with a great number of young men, which would have been much more worth to the Romans; but this old man would in no case agree thereto, but received his death at the enemies’ hand very patiently, considering his old years; and also what profit these young men should be to the Romans.’†

High offenders are discovered, but the court durst not touch them.

The inquiry lasted till June, and much was learnt from those who had not Throgmorton’s courage. Matters came out implicating Lord Bray and Lord Delaware. Lord Bray was arrested and examined; Lord Delaware was tried and found guilty. But they were powerful, and had powerful friends.‡ The court were forced to content themselves with smaller game. Successive batches of the conspirators were des- CH. 34.

* Walpole’s Deposition: MS. LODGE’S Illustrations, vol. viii.

† Peckham’s Confession: MS. Ibid., vol. viii.

‡ Swift to Lord Shrewsbury: Ibid., vol. i.; MACHYNN’S Diary.

patched as their confessions were exhausted or despaired of. Throgmorton, silent to the last, A.D. 1556.
was sentenced on the 21st of April, and suffered April.
on the 28th. On the 19th of May, Captain Stanton was hanged; on the 2nd of June, Derick The rest followed—his cowardice had not saved him—are succes-with Rosey and Bedyll. On the 7th of July, Sir sively exe-Henry Peckham was disposed of, and with him cuted.
John Daniel, who was guilty, if not of worse,
yet of having concealed machinations dangerous
to the State.*

* Daniel was supposed, like Throgmorton, to know more than he had told; and to quicken his confession he was confined in a dungeon, of which he has left his own description in an appeal to the mercy of the commissioners. 'I beseech your honours be good to me,' he wrote, 'for I am a sick man, laid here in a dungeon where I am fain to do ——— and ——— in the place that I do lie in, and if I do lie here all this night, I think I shall not be alive to-morrow. Mr. Binifield [perhaps an examiner] as he cometh to me is ready to cast his gorge, so he saith; and I have no light all day so much as to see my hands perfectly. Pity me, for God's sake!—Your honours' footstool, John Daniel. Good Master of the House, good Mr. Controller, good Mr. Vice-Chamberlain, good Mr. Englefield, good Mr. Waldegrave!'

Again, in another letter, he writes:—

'For God's sake, be my honourable masters, and rid me out of this dungeon, for I do lie here a man sore pained with the stone, and among the newts and spiders. For the love of God, I ask it; for I do all things in the place that I do lie in. My good and honourable masters, for God's sake, be good to me, and consider that I did never give my consent to do no evil. Good Mr. Englefield, consider my meaning, and be good master to me, and consider the place I lie in, and the pain of the stone.'—Daniel's Confessions: MS. Mary, Domestic, vol. viii.

The effect, however, apparently was what the examiners desired. A note of the council remains to the effect that

'Daniel being yesterday removed to a worse lodging, beginneth this day to be more open and plain than he hath been, whereby we perceive he knoweth all, and we trust and think verily he will utter the same.'—Privy Council Minutes: Ibid.

CH. 34.

A.D. 1556.

May.
The king
will not return to England,
and the queen loses
control over herself.

The Lords
are discon-
tented.

But the danger did not pass off with the execution of a few youths. An inveterate conviction had taken hold of men of all ranks, that Philip was coming over with an army to destroy English liberty. Paget went to Flanders to entreat him to come back unattended, to dispel the alarm by his presence, and to comfort the queen; but Paget returned with a letter instead of Philip, and the poor queen looked ten years older on the receipt of it. She durst not stir abroad to face the execration with which the people now received her. She passed her time in frenzied extremities of passion, 'because she could neither enjoy the presence of her husband, nor the affection of her subjects; and dreading every moment that her life might be attempted by her own attendants.*' A fleet was fitted out in the Channel. A bishop in the queen's confidence was asked the reason by another bishop. 'To overawe rebels,' was the answer, 'and to carry off Elizabeth into Flanders or Spain.†' The government was carried on entirely by the legate and the small knot of Catholic fanatics who had adhered to the queen's fortunes in the late reign. Lord William Howard told Noailles that he and the other lords lived in perpetual dread and suspicion; if his honour would allow him, he would throw up his office, and retire, with

* Estant en continuel fureur de ne pouvoir jouir de la presence de son mary ny de l'amour de son peuple, et dans une fort grande peur d'estre offensée de sa propre vie par aul-cungs des siens.—Noailles to the King of France, May 7: Ambassades, vol. v.

† Same to Montmorency, April 21: Ibid.

those who had gone before him, as a poor gentleman, to France. CH. 34.

The general suffering was aggravated by a likelihood of famine. The harvest of 1555 had failed, and bread, with all other articles of food, was daily rising. The conspiracy exasperated the persecution, which was degenerating into wholesale atrocity. On the 23rd of April, six men were burnt at Smithfield; on the 28th, six more were burnt at Colchester; on the 15th of May, an old lame man and a blind man were burnt at Stratford-le-Bow. In the same month three women suffered at Smithfield, and a blind boy was burnt at Gloucester. In Guernsey, a mother and her two daughters were brought to the stake. One of the latter, a married woman with child, was delivered in the midst of her torments, and the infant just rescued was tossed back into the flames.* Reason, humanity, even common prudence, were cast to the winds. On the 27th of June, thirteen unfortunates, eleven men and two women, were destroyed together at Stratford-le-Bow, in the presence of twenty thousand people.† A schoolmaster, in Norfolk, in July read an inflammatory proclamation in a church. He and three others were instantly hanged. Ferocity in the government and lawlessness in the people went hand in hand. Along the river bank stood rows of gibbets, with bodies of pirates swinging from them in the

A.D. 1556.

May.

Prospect of famine.

The persecution becomes furious,

And the Government falls into wholesale ferocity.

* FOXE. This hideous story was challenged by Harding, the controversialist, in the next reign. He was unfortunate in calling attention to it, for the case was inquired into, and the account was found too certainly true.

† MACHYN'S Diary.

CH. 34. wind. In the autumn, sixty men were sentenced
 A.D. 1556. to be hanged together, for what crime is un-July. known, at Oxford;* and as a symbol at headquarters of the system of the administration, four corpses of thieves hung as a spectacle of terror
 before the very gates of St. James's Palace.†

A holocaust, intended at Smithfield,
 is prevented by the attitude of
 the people.

Pole checks Bonner's
 impru-
 dence.

But both Pole and Bonner continue their cruelties
 when they can venture
 with safety.

On the 20th of August, twenty-three men and women were brought to London from Colchester,
 tied in a string with ropes to furnish another holocaust. A thousand people cheered them through the streets as they entered the city; and the symptoms of disorder were so significant and threatening, that Bonner wrote to Pole for instructions how he should proceed. The government was alarmed; 'the council, not without good consideration,' decided that it would be dangerous to go on with the executions; and Pole, checking Bonner's zeal, allowed the prisoners to escape for the time, under an easy form of submission which they could conscientiously take.
 They were dismissed to their homes, only, however, for several of them to be slaughtered afterwards, under fresh pretexts, in detail;‡ and Pole took an occasion, as will be presently seen, of reprimanding the citizens of London for their unnatural sympathy with God's enemies. That he had no objection to these large massacres,
 when they could be ventured safely, he showed himself in the following year, when fourteen heretics, of both sexes, were burnt in two days
 at Canterbury and Maidstone.§

* MACHYN.

‡ See their stories: FOXE, vol. viii.

† Ibid.

§ FOXE, vol. viii.

Why, it may well be asked, did not the lords CH. 34.
and gentlemen of England rise and trample A.D. 1557.
down the perpetrators of these devilish enormities? It is a grave question, to which, nevertheless, some tolerable answer is possible.

On the 21st of January, 1557, the English ambassador in Paris wrote in cypher to Sir William Petre, of 'a matter' which he desired should not be communicated to the queen, 'lest it should disquiet her.' A refugee had informed him, 'that there was a great conspiracy in hand against the queen, which without doubt would deprive her of her estate.' He had asked for names, but these his informant would not give, saying merely, 'the best of England were in it,' and 'such a number agreed thereupon, that it was impossible but that it would take effect.' There was no chance of discovery; 'the matter had been in hand for a year or thereabouts,' yet no one 'had uttered a word of it:' should it become known, the conspirators were so strong that the catastrophe would only be precipitated. They would have moved already, 'but for one man who had stayed them for a while.'

A second conspiracy, separate from the first, is reported as being held in suspense over the queen,

Entreaties for more explicitness were fruitless. 'By no means,' wrote Wotton, 'would he name any man unto me; but only said that the chiefest of them were such as had never offended the Queen's Highness before; that the matter should begin in the evening, and the next day by eight in the morning it should be done.'

The queen was not to be killed; at least, not immediately. 'They will not kill her,' the man

CH. 34. said, 'but deprive her of her estate, and then
 A.D. 1556. might she chance to be used as she used Queen
 Jane;' and he added, 'that they who went about the matter would not agree that any foreign prince should have any meddling in it; neither Dudley nor any of the English gentlemen in France were privy to the matter.'*

With which France has no connexion.

That any such combination as this letter described, ever really menaced Mary's throne, cannot be affirmed with certainty. The last two sentences, however, point to the difficulty which had embarrassed all attempts which had been hitherto ventured. The vice of the previous conspiracies had been the intrigues with France. The better order of English statesmen refused to connect themselves with movements which would give the Court of Paris a dangerous influence in England, and would entitle the French king to press the claims of the Queen of Scots upon the English crown. If there was truth in the refugee's story, if there really was a conspiracy of 'the best of England,' clear of all such mischievous elements, it must have consisted of the body of the nobility, whom Lord William Howard described to Noailles as equally dissatisfied with himself. The heresy acts had been restored by the help of the bishops against the sustained opposition of the majority of the lay peers. For the hundred and fifty years during which those acts had been upon the Statute Book, they had expressed the general feeling of the country, yet during all that time, fewer persons had suffered under them than had been sacrificed during the last twelve months. Having failed to destroy her sister, having been unable to alter the succession, the queen was desperate; the Spaniards were watching their opportunity to interfere by force, and would want no encouragement which she could give them; and every honest English statesman must have watched her with the most jealous distrust. Yet, on the other hand, she was childless; her life must necessarily soon close by the course of nature, and with her life the tyranny would end. If force was attempted, she would not fall without a struggle; the clergy would stand by her, and all whom the clergy could influence. Philip would have the pretext, for which he was longing, for sending Spanish troops; and though liberty might and would prevail in the end, thousands of lives might be sacrificed, and Elizabeth's succession would be stained. The appeal to strength was, and is, the last to which good men will allow themselves to be driven. The Lords understood one another: they would not be the first to commence; but if an attempt were made to carry off Elizabeth, or to throw on land a single Spanish battalion, they would know how to act.

* Wotton to Petre, cypher: French MSS., Mary, bundle 13. State Paper Office.

CH. 34.

A.D. 1556.
May.Reasons for
the anxiety
of the lay peers;Yet reasons, also,
why they should not interfere till the last moment.

Meantime, Dudley, Ashton, Horsey, the brothers Tremayne, and 'divers others,' were safe in France, and were hospitably entertained there. In England they were proclaimed traitors. At Paris they were received openly at court. The

CH. 34.

A.D. 1556.

May.

The queen
demands
the refugees, whom Henry provides with ships.

Courtenay
is sent for
to join them, but
dies.

queen wrote to Wotton with her own hand, commanding him to demand their surrender.* She sent for Noailles, and required that 'those wretches, those heretics, those traitorous execrable villains' who had conspired against her throne should be placed in her hands.† Henry, with unembarrassed coolness, promised Wotton that they should be apprehended, while he furnished them with ships, which they openly fitted for sea at the mouth of the Seine; and one of their number, Henry Killegrew, went to Italy to look for Courtenay, who was in honourable exile there, to entreat him to put himself at their head. Courtenay promised to come, so Killegrew reported on his return;‡ his name would have given them strength, his presence weakness; but if he really thought again of mixing himself in conspiracies his intentions were frustrated. The last direct heir of the noblest family in England died at the end of the summer, of an ague caught among the lagoons at Venice.§

The refugees, however, could do their work

* The Queen to Wotton: MS. France, bundle 13.

† Gens abominable, hérétiques et traistres villains et exécrables. —Noailles to the King, May 7: Ambassades, vol. v.

‡ Wotton to Petre, cypher: French MSS. State Paper Office, bundle 13.

§ His death was of course attributed by the world to poison. Courtenay's birth, and the fortune which was so nearly thrust upon him, give his fate a kind of interest, and an authentic account of it may not be unwelcome.

On the 18th of September, Peter Vannes, the English resident at Venice, wrote to the queen from Padua:—

'It hath pleased Almighty God, as the Author of all goodness, and as One that doth nothing in vain, to call the Earl of Devonshire to his mercy, even about the hour, or little more or less, that I am writing of this present; and being very sorry to trouble your Highness with this without Courtenay. The Killebrews, the Tre- CH. 34.

maynes, young Stafford, and many more, put to
A.D. 1556.

kind of news, yet forasmuch as the providence of God must be fulfilled in all things, I shall somewhat touch his sickness till the hour of death. True it is that he, as I have perceived, for the avoiding all suspicion from himself, hath chosen a life more solitary than needed, saving the company of certain gentlemen, Venetians, among whom he was much made of. It chanced him upon three weeks ago, for his honest recreation, to go to a place called Lio, a piece of an island five miles from Venice, for to see his hawks fly upon a wasted ground, without any houses; and there he was suddenly taken with a great tempest of wind and rain, insomuch that his boat, called [a] gondola, could not well return to Venice; and he was fain, for his succour, to take a certain searcher's boat that by chance there arrived, and so to Venice he came, being body and legs very thinly clothed, refusing to change them with any warmer garment. And upon that time, or within few days after, as he told me, had a fall upon the stairs of his house, and after seeming to himself to be well, and finding no pain, took his journey hither unto Padua; and for the avoiding of the weariness of the water, and the labouring of horses, chose the worse way coming; and so by certain waggons called coaches, very shaking and uneasy to my judgment, came to Padua upon Saturday at night. Of whose coming, being advertised, I went to visit him on the morrow after, and found him very weak; and since that time he began to appear every day worse and worse, avoiding friends' visitations; and drew himself to the counsel of two of the best physicians of this town, and entered into a continued hot ague, sometimes more vehement than at another; and as I have seen and heard, he hath been always diligently attended. I have charged his servants in your name, and as they will avoid your displeasure, that a true inventory shall be made of such small movables as he had here, and that specially all kind of writings and letters that he had either here or at Venice, shall be put in assurance, abiding for your commandment. I am now about to see the order of his burial, with as much sparing and as much honour as can be done; for the merchantmen on whom, by your Grace's commandment, he had a credit of 3 or 4 thousand crowns, are not as yet willing to disburse any money without a sufficient discharge of my Lord of Devonshire's hand, the doing whereof is past. I shall shift to see him buried as well as I can; notwithstanding, I beseech your Grace not to be discontented with me that I am at the next door to go a begging.

'My said Lord of Devonshire is dead, in mine opinion a very good Christian man; for after that I had much exhorted him to take his Communion and rites of the Church as a thing

CH. 34.

A.D. 1556.

August.
The refugees go to sea, and make war upon the Spaniards.

sea with three or four vessels, and treated all Spaniards with whom they could fall in as their natural enemies. Before the summer was out, they had 'taken divers good prizes,' and 'did trust they should take more.' 'In case the worst fell, the gain thereof would find them all;' and on the 4th of August it was reported that they had taken a fort 'on one of her Majesty's islands,' probably in Scilly, where the dangerous and intricate navigation placed them beyond risk of capture. Making war on their own account, half as pirates, half as crusaders, these youthful adventurers seized the Spanish caracks on their way to Flanders, sailed openly with their prizes into Rochelle or La Hogue, sold them, and bought arms and ammunition. Their most necessary, and by whose means God giveth unto His chosen people health, both bodily and ghostly: he answered me, by broken words, that he was well content so to do; and in token thereof, and in repentance for his sins, he lift up his eyes and knocked himself upon the heart; and after I had suffered him to pause a good while, I caused the Sacrament to be brought, and after the priest's godly exhortation, he forced himself to receive the blessed Communion; but his tongue had so stopped his mouth, and his teeth so clove together, that in no wise he could receive that same; and after this sort this gentleman is gone, as I do not doubt, to God his mercy.

'I shall not let to say to your

Grace, that since his coming to Padua, by way of communication, he showed unto me, that it had been reported unto him that some one had said that he was better French than English, and if God did recover him and send him his health so that he might come to the knowledge of his misreporter, he was minded to try that quarrel by the sword.'

In a letter written a few days later, Vannes said that, in consequence of rumours having gone abroad that the earl had been poisoned, the Podesta, at his request, had ordered the body to be opened, and examined by physicians, which was accordingly done.—Peter Vannes to the Queen: Venetian MSS. State Paper Office.

finances were soon prosperous. Wild spirits of all nations—Scots, English, French, whoever chose to offer—found service under their flag.
They were the first specimens of the buccaneer-
ing chivalry of the next generation—the germ out of which rose the Drakes, the Raleighs, the Hawkinses, who harried the conquerors of the New World.

CH. 34.
A.D. 1556.
August.

In vain Wotton protested. The French king affected to be sorry. The Constable said that France was large; things happened which ought not to happen, yet could not be helped; the adventurers should be put down, if possible.
'These men brought nothing with them out of England,' Wotton doggedly replied, 'and were in such good credit with the people in France
that nobody would lend them a shilling, and yet had they found ships which they had armed, and manned with good numbers of soldiers. What would the Queen's Highness think?'

The French court, in affected deference to such complaints, armed vessels, which they pretended were to pursue the privateers to their nest; but,
as Wotton ascertained, they were intended really
to act as their consorts.*

The French
court does not act
with strict honour
about
them.

It was plain that the French king did not anticipate any long continuance to the truce of Vaucelles. In fact, Paul IV., whose schemes in Italy that truce had arrested, had succeeded in inducing him to break it. Lest his oath should

The league
recom-mences between France and
the Papacy.

* Letters of Wotton to the Queen: French MSS. bundle 13.
State Paper Office.

CH. 34. make a difficulty, the Pope had an ever-ready
 A.D. 1556. dispensation; and Paul's nephew, Cardinal Caraffa, August. came to Paris in July to make arrangements for the expulsion of the Spaniards from Naples.*

Paul declares
 Philip deprived of
 the kingdom of Naples.

War between Philip and the Pope.

To insure Henry the continued support of the Papacy, Paul undertook to create French cardinals on so large a scale as would give him the command of the next election. Henry, in spite of the entreaties of Montmorency, promised, on his side, to send an army to Paul's support; and the Pope, without waiting for the arrival of the French troops, seized the Duchy of Paleano, and excommunicated the Colonnas, as the friends of the enemies of the Holy See. Scarcely caring to look for a pretext, he declared the Spanish Prince deprived of the kingdom of Naples; and himself attempted to put in force his sentence against the Duke of Alva, who was acting there as Philip's viceroy.

The event had thus actually arrived, of which the expectation the year before had appeared so alarming. The most orthodox sovereign in Europe found himself forced into war with his spiritual father. The parent was become insane; the faithful child was obliged, in consequence, to place him under restraint, with as much tenderness and respect as the circumstances permitted. To the English council Philip explained the hard necessity under which he was placed.†

* Wotton to Petre: MS.
 Ibid. Compare SIR JAMES MEL-
 VILLE'S Memoirs, p. 38.

† 'Pontifex, tantum abest ut mollissimis obsequiis atque officiis acquieverit, non potuit tan-

The Duke of Alva crossed the Neapolitan frontier into the States of the Church with twelve thousand men, taking the towns that lay in his way; and protesting while he did it that he was the most faithful servant of the Holy See. Individually a pious Catholic, officially a military machine, Alva obeyed orders with mechanical inflexibility, and, irresistible as destiny, advanced towards Rome. The College of Cardinals, who remembered the occupation of the city by Bourbon's army, implored the Pope to have pity on them. The Pope had been too precipitate in commencing operations without waiting for the French. He was forced to submit his pride, and sue for an armistice, to which Alva, in the moderation of conscious strength, consented.

CH. 34.

A.D. 1556.
September.
The Duke of Alva advances on Rome, and the Pope sues for an armistice.

The French, on the other hand, were pre-dem sibi obtemperare quin pleno Cardinalium Senatu Regni Neapolitani privationem per suum fiscalem proposuerit, cum nullius nos in ipsum Pontificem, aut sedem apostolicam contumaciæ, summæ quin potius uti fas est observantiæ nobis simus conscii, ac ne in præfractâ quidem ejus obstinatione a solitis officiis destitutum est, donec cum nullâ molliore ope malum posset mitigari; magisque indies ac magis propagaretur, videretque Albæ Dux copias eum undique contrahere, apparatus facere, tempus ducere, quoscumque principes quibuscumque conditionibus sollicitare, ut ingruenti rerum omnium ruinæ occurreret, ad hoc extremum remedium invitus coactusque descendit. Quæ omnia quanquam vobis comperta quando in eorum mentionem per vestras litteras incidistis, per nos etiam vobis significanda duximus; atque id præterea eâ temperantiâ, ac modestiâ hoc bellum a duce geri atque administrari, ut nihil nisi orbis Christiani tranquillitas, sedis apostolicæ dignitas, et nostrorum regnorum securitas procuraretur, neque ullum nos ex hoc bello gloriæ aucupemur, summum potius dolorem animique ægritudinem percipiamus.' — Philip to the English Council: MS. Mary, Domestic, vol. ix. State Paper Office.

CH. 34. paring to strike a blow in a quarter where as yet they were unlooked for.

A.D. 1556.
September.

The persecution of the Protestants at Calais provokes a conspiracy.

A plan is formed, in concert with the refugees at Paris, to betray Calais to the French.

The pastoral anxieties of the English legate had extended to Calais, where the Protestants were in considerable numbers. A commission was sent thither which proceeded with the usual severities,* and the sufferers, or those among the garrisons in Calais and Guisnes, whose sympathy with the Reformation was stronger than their patriotism, placed themselves in correspondence with Sir Henry Dudley, at Paris. The pay of the troops was long in arrear, and they were all mutinous and discontented. Neither Guisnes, Hammes, nor Calais itself were provisioned for more than three or four weeks; and the refugees, caring only to revenge themselves on Mary, were laying a train in connexion with several of the 'chiefest officers' in the three fortresses, to betray them into the hands of France. The existence of a conspiracy became known by accident to some one, who placed Wotton on his guard; and Wotton, by vigilance and by the help of spies, ascertained gradually the nature of the scheme. In the beginning of October he discovered that Senarpont, the governor of Boulogne, was silently increasing the garrison of the Boulonnois. Then he heard of troops collecting at Rouen, of large preparations of military stores,

* 'There is a faction or dissension within Calais for religion's sake, whereof it seemeth that a commission of late sent thither, I cannot tell whether somewhat rigorously used, may have given occasion.'—Wotton to the Queen, cypher: French MSS. bundle 13, State Paper Office.

of sappers' and miners' tools, and 'great files, which would cut in two without noise the largest [harbour] chains.'* Next, it seemed that the leader of the adventurous party, which fourteen years before 'took the town of Marano by practise and subtlety,' was in Calais in disguise. Finally, he learnt that Henry himself was going to Rouen, to conduct the enterprise in person.

CH. 34.
A.D. 1556.
October.
The French court make secret preparations.

The disaffection had penetrated so deeply into the English garrisons that caution was required in dealing with them; while for some weeks either the queen disbelieved the danger, or the council took no steps to obviate it. The Catholic clique had, in fact, not a soldier among them, and possibly knew not in which direction to turn. The honour of his country at last recalled Lord Pembroke to the public service in time to save Calais for a few more months.

By the middle of November eighteen ensigns of French infantry and a thousand horse were at Abbeville. Dudley, with the refugee fleet, was in readiness to blockade the harbour, while Henry was to march upon the town. If possible, he would find the gates open: at all events he would meet with no protracted resistance. But the move had been anticipated. Reinforcements and supplies were sent from England, money was despatched to pay up the arrears of the troops, and Pembroke himself

But reinforcements are sent in time from England, under command of Pembroke, and Calais is saved for a time.

* Wotton to the Queen, cypher: French MSS. bundle 13, State Paper Office.

CH. 34. went over in command.* No open inquiry was
 A.D. 1556. ventured, but the suspected persons were quietly November. removed. The French withdrew, and the queen's government, through the bad patriotism of the refugees, recovered a momentary strength.

Second
 failure of the harvest, and famine.

The faint good fortune came opportunely; for in England the harvest had again failed, and the threat of famine had become the reality. On the 23rd of December malt was sold in London for forty shillings a quarter, and white flour at six shillings a bushel. The helpless remedy was attempted of crying up the base money, but the markets answered only by a further rise.† In the utter misery of the people, some were feeding upon acorns; some, in London, more piteously, left their infant children at the doors of their wealthy neighbours, to save them from starvation.

A famine was considered to be the immediate work of Heaven, and to be sent for an immediate moral cause. And yet the monasteries were rising from their ruins. Westminster was again an abbey. Feckenham was installed abbot on the 29th of November, with the ancient ceremonies, and walked in sad procession round the cloisters at the head of his friars.‡ The remnant of the monks of Glastonbury had crawled back into the

* The Council to Philip, November 22nd: MS. Domestic, Mary, vol. ix.

† MACHYN.

‡ The new monks did not do credit to their restoration. Anne of Cleves died the next year, and lay in state in the abbey.

'The 22nd of August,' says

Machyn, 'was the herse of my Lady Anne of Cleves taken down at Westminster, the which the monks by night had spoiled of all velvet cloth, arms, banners, penselles, of all the majesty and valence, the which was never seen afore so done.'—Diary, p. 148.

ruins of their home. The queen had spared no effort and no sacrifice where her own power extended; and she had exhorted and advised where she was unable to act. Yet enough had not been done. In Ireland, indeed, the Catholic spirit had life in it. The Earl of Desmond had allowed no stone to be thrown down from the religious houses which had fallen to his share in the distribution. He had sheltered and supported the monks in the bad times, he now replaced them at his private cost;* and the example was telling among the chiefs. But in England, unfortunately, the lay owners of the Church lands, orthodox and unorthodox alike, were hopelessly impenitent.

CH. 34.
A.D. 1556.
November.
The queen restores the religious houses.
The Irish chiefs follow the example.

This, perhaps, was one cause of God's displeasure—the heretics were another; the heretics, and the sympathy with heresy displayed by the inhabitants of London, which had compelled the temporary release of the prisoners sent up from Essex.

It has been mentioned that the legate took occasion to admonish the citizens for their behaviour.† In the present or the following year he issued a pastoral letter, laying before them, and before the educated inhabitants of England generally, their duty at the present crisis; with an explanation, not entirely accurate, of the

* Desmond to the Queen: Irish MSS. State Paper Office.

† 'Three years and more after the restoration of the people to the Church,' the legate says in the body of the letter. The date of it will be December, 1556, or December, 1557, as the three years are calculated from the restoration of Orthodoxy, or from the reunion with Rome.

CH. 34. spirit in which the Church had hitherto dealt with them. 'That by license and dispensation,' he said, 'you do enjoy, and keep, and possess such goods and lands of the Church as were found in your hands, this was done of the Church your mother's tenderness unto you, considering your imbecillity and weakness after so sore a sickness that you had in the schism, at the which time your appetite served you to no meat, but to that fruit that came from the lands of the Church; and by that you lived, which she was content you should keep still, and made promise it should not be taken from you. And so it was left in your hand, as it were an apple in a child's hand given by the mother, which she, perceiving him to feed too much of, and knowing it should do him hurt if he himself should eat the whole, would have him give her a little piece thereof, which the boy refusing, and whereas he would cry out if she would take it from him, letteth him alone therewith. But the father, her husband, coming in, if he shall see how the boy will not let go one morsel to the mother that hath given him the whole, she asking it with so fair means, he may peradventure take the apple out of the boy's hand, and if he cry, beat him also, and cast the apple out of the window.'

They must give back some part of the goods of the Church, or else it may be the worse for them.

The maternal tenderness, under this aspect of the secularization, had been more weak than wise.

'As the English laity had dishonoured the ministers of the Church above all people,' continued the legate, 'so must they now honour them

above all people, remembering Christ's words— CH. 34.
 'He that despiseth you despiseth Me.' They must obey the priests, therefore, implicitly; they must be careful to pay their tithes honestly; they must what they denied their priests they denied their God; and they must show their repentance especially where they had especially offended, 'touching the injuries they had done to the ministers of God, whom God had set over them, to be honoured as they would their natural father.'

A.D. 1556.
 December.
 They must obey their priests.

'And this,' he said, coming to the heart of the matter, 'this you cannot do if you favour heretics, who being the very enemies of God and man, yet specially their enmity extendeth against priests. Here is another point that you must show worthy of a repentant mind: that whereas you have sore offended God by giving favour to heretics, now temper your favour under such manner that if you can convert them by any ways unto the unity of the Church, then do it, for it is a great work of mercy. But if ye cannot, and ye suffer or favour them, there cannot be a work of greater cruelty against the commonwealth than to nourish or favour any such. For be you assured, there is no kind of men so pernicious to the commonwealth as they be; there are no thieves, no murderers, no adulterers, nor no kind of treason, to be compared to theirs, who, as it were, undermining the chief foundation of all commonwealths, which is religion, maketh an entry to all kinds of vices in the most heinous manner.' . . . 'You specially of the City of London, you being the first that received the fruit of grace in the new plantation, the seed

And they must show
 no more favour to
 the heretics, who are the greatest enemies of God and
 man.

CH. 34. of benediction being first cast upon you, to make you a ground to bring forth all fruit of sanctity and justice; shall I say, that after all this done, more briars and thorns hath grown here among you than in all the realm besides? I cannot say so, nor I will not; albeit it might so seem, for a greater multitude of these brambles
 and briars were cast in the fire here among you than in any place besides; but many of them being grown in other places, and brought in and burned among you, may give occasion that you have a worse name without your desert. The thing standeth not in the name—bethink you yourselves how it standeth. Wherefore cometh this, that when any heretic shall go to execution, he shall lack no comforting of you,
 and encouraging to die in his perverse opinion?
 that when he shall be put in prison he shall have more cherishing? As it is now, this may not be suffered. For their boldness in their death, it is small argument of grace to be in them; Christ himself showing more heaviness
 and dolour at his dying hour than did the thieves that hung beside him, which did blaspheme Christ, setting nought by him, specially one of them, showing no further fear. So do the heretics at their deaths like the blasphemer.*

A.D. 1556.
 December.
 Briars and brambles
 are only fit
 to be burned.

The boldness of the heretics in their death
 is no evidence of God's
 favour.

Cruel and savage as the persecution had become, it was still inadequate. The famine lasted,
 and therefore God was angry.

* Address of Cardinal Pole to the Citizens of London: STYFFE'S Memorials, vol. vi.

The new year opened with the appointment of a commission, consisting of Bonner, Thirlby, and twenty other peers, gentlemen, and canon lawyers, on whom the court could rely. 'Wicked persons' had invented slanders against the queen's person, and had sown 'pestilent heresies' in the realm. The queen, therefore, 'minding to punish such enormities,' and having especial trust in the wisdom of these persons, gave them power to institute inquiries at their pleasure into the conduct and opinions of every man and woman in all parts of the kingdom. The protection of the law was suspended. The commissioners might arrest any person at any place. Three of them were enough to form a court; and mayors, sheriffs, and magistrates were commanded to assist at their peril.

CH. 34.
A.D. 1556.
December.
A commission appointed for
the more rigorous
conduct of
the persecution;

The object of the commission was 'to search and find out' the sellers of heretical books, or those who in any way professed heresy or taught it; to ascertain who refused to attend mass, to walk in procession, to use holy water, or in any way betrayed disrespect for the established religion. Those who 'persisted in their bad opinions' were to be given up to their ordinary, to be punished according to law. The commissioners were themselves empowered to punish with fine or imprisonment those who yielded, or those whose offences were in the second degree, taking care to collect the fines which they inflicted, and to certify the Exchequer of their receipts. They were not embarrassed by a necessity of impanelling juries; they might call

And the
law is arbitrarily set aside to give the commission
scope.

CH. 34. juries if they pleased; they might use 'all other means and politic ways that they could devise.'
 A.D. 1557. February. No Spanish inquisition possessed larger or less tolerable powers; no English sovereign ever more entirely set aside the restrictions of the law.* The appointment of the commission was followed up by Pole in a visitation of the diocese of Canterbury. Persons were nominated to examine into the doctrines of the clergy; to learn whether those who had been married held communication with their wives; whether the names of those who had not been reconciled had been registered as he had ordered; and from every clergyman to ascertain the habits, beliefs, and opinions of every resident male or female in his parish.†

Pole issues articles for a visitation in the diocese of Canterbury.

Other commissioners again were sent to the universities, with powers extending, not over the living only, but the dead.

Scot, Bishop of Chester, Watson, Bishop of Lincoln, and Christopherson, Master of Trinity and Bishop of Chichester, went in January to Cambridge, accompanied by Ormaneto, the Venetian, a confidential friend of the legate. Bucer and Fagius slept in St. Mary's and St. Michael's. The 10th of January, the day after the bishops' arrival, the two churches were laid under an interdict, as defiled with the presence of unhallowed bodies. On the 15th a summons was fixed to St. Mary's door, citing Martin Bucer and Paul Fagius, Bucer and Fagius are cited from their graves to answer a charge of heresy.

* Royal Commission printed in FOXE, vol. viii. p. 301, and by BURNET in his Collectanea.

† Articles of the Visitation of Cardinal Pole: FOXE, vol. viii.

or any other who would plead on their behalf, to make answer three days after, before the commission, on a charge of heresy. The court sate, and no one appeared. The session was adjourned for a week, while the colleges were searched, and primers, Prayer-books, Bibles, or other interdicted volumes, were hunted out and brought together. On the 26th the bishops met again; the accused remained undefended, and the heresy was taken to be proved; sentence was passed therefore, that the bodies should be disinterred and burnt. On the 6th of February the coffins were taken out of the graves, and chained to a stake in the market-place; the Bibles and Prayer-books were heaped round them with a pile of faggots, and books and bodies were reduced to ashes.

CH. 34.

A.D. 1557.
January.Their bodies are exhumed
and burnt.

Having purged Cambridge, Ormaneto proceeded to Oxford, on business of the same description.

Peter Martyr, when he came into residence as divinity professor at Christ Church, had outraged the orthodox party in the University by bringing a wife within the college walls; and Catherine Cathie, so the wife was named, had, like the wife of Luther, been a professed nun. She had died before Mary's accession, and had been buried in the cathedral. A process was now instituted against her similar to that at Cambridge.

An unforeseen difficulty occurred in the conduct of the prosecution. Catherine Cathie had lived quietly and unobtrusively; she had taught nothing and had written no books; and no evidence could be found to justify her conviction on a charge of heresy.

CH. 34.

A.D. 1557.

February.

The body
of Catherine Cathie,
the wife of
Peter Martyr,

Ormaneto wrote to the legate for instructions; and as burning was not permissible, the legate replied that, 'forasmuch as Catherine Cathie, of detestable memory, had called herself the wife of Peter Martyr, a heretic, although both he and she had before taken vows of religion; forasmuch as she had lived with him in Oxford in fornication, and after her death was buried near the sepulchre of the Holy Virgin St. Frideswide, Ormaneto should invite the Dean of the Cathedral to cast out the carcase from holy ground, and deal with it according to his discretion.'

Is dug up
at Oxford,
and thrown into a cess-
pool;

Catherine Cathie, therefore, was dug up, taken out of her coffin, and flung into a cesspool at the back of the Dean's house, and it was hoped that by this means the blessed St. Frideswide would be able to rest again in peace. Human foresight is imperfect; years passed and times changed; and Elizabeth, when she had the power to command, directed that the body should be restored to decent burial. The fragments were recovered with difficulty, and were about to be replaced in the earth under the floor of the cathedral, when some one produced the sacred box which contained the remains of St. Frideswide. Made accessible to the veneration of the faithful by Cardinal Pole, the relics had been concealed on the return of heresy by some pious worshipper. They were brought out at the critical moment, and an instant sense of the fitness of things consigned to the same resting-place the bones of the wife of Peter Martyr. The married nun and the virgin saint were buried together, and the dust of the

Where,
however, it does not always remain.

two still remains under the pavement inextricably blended.* CH. 34.

But Pole did not live to see the retribution. Convinced, if ever there was a sincere conviction in any man, that the course which he was pursuing was precisely that which God required of him, he laboured on in his dark vocation. Through the spring and summer the persecution, under the new commission, raged with redoubled fury.

A.D. 1557.
February.

The persecution is more severe than ever.

The subject is one to which it will not be necessary to return, except with some brief details. In this place, therefore, shall be given an extract from a tract in circulation among the Protestants who were expecting death; and it may be judged, from the sentiments with which these noble-natured men faced the prospect of their terrible trial, with what justice Pole called them brambles and briars only fit to be burnt—criminals worse than thieves, or murderers, or adulterers.†

The preparation of the Protestants for their fate.

* WOOD'S Annals of the University of Oxford.—The story is authentic. The following is the Roman Catholic version of it:—
'Oxonii sepulta fuerat digna Petro Martyre concubina, parthenonis et ipsa desertrix sacrilega ut ille cœnobii. Ejus ossa refodi jusserat Maria et sterquilinio ut par erat condi. Nunc æmulo plane sanctitatis et virginitatis in Elizabethâ ingenio requisita sunt inter sordes sterquilinii publici quarum foediissima pars erant et incredibili studio inventa purgata lota. In thecam eandem reponantur in quâ S. Frideswidæ reliquiæ colebantur, et cum his adeo confusa ut nullâ unquam possunt diligentia secerni. Clauditur locus et cubitalibus litteris hoc epitaphio decoratur 'hic jacet religio cum superstitione,' meliore titulo meretrici hæretici pessimi concubinæ; Proh nefas! deteriore ancillæ Christi sanctissimæ virginis, attributo.—FOX, vol. viii. Editor's note.

† An Excellent Epistle; translated from French into English by Thomas Pownell, with a preface, A.D. 1556. The copy from

CH. 34.
 A.D. 1557.
 February.

‘The cross of persecution, if we will put childishness apart, and visibly weigh the worthiness thereof, is that sovereign, tried medicine that quencheth the daily digested poison of self-love, worldly pleasure, fleshly felicity. It is the only worthy poison of ambition, covetousness, extortion, uncleanness, licentiousness, wrath, strife, sedition, sects, malice, and such other wayward worms: it is the hard hammer that breaketh off the rust from the anchor of a Christian faith. O profitable instrument! O excellent exercise, that cannot be spared in a Christian life! with what alacrity of mind, with what desirous affection, with what earnest zeal, ought we to embrace this incomparable jewel, this sovereign medicine, this comfortable cup of tribulation.

‘When a piece of ground is limited and bounded, it doth not only signify that it goeth no further, but also it tendeth and stretcheth to the bound. It is not enough to consider that we shall not pass the time that God hath limited and determined us to live, but we must assuredly persuade ourselves that we shall live as long as he hath ordained us to live; and so shall we do, in despite of all our enemies.

‘And tell me, have men given us our life? No, forsooth. No more can they take it away from us. God hath given it, and God only doth take which I make my extract is in the Bodleian Library at Oxford; it is marked in the margin in various places with a finger  apparently almost as old as the	printing; and this finger was perhaps drawn by some one whom the words were consoling or inspiriting in the hour of his own trial.

--	--

it away, for he is the Lord of death as well as of life; wherefore, when the appointed time of our death is come, let us assure ourselves that it is God only, and none other that doth kill us, for he saith, It is I that kill and make alive again.

CH. 34.
A. D. 1557.
February.

‘ Let us follow the example of Christ, our Master, who seeing his death approaching, said to God, My Father, not as I will, but as thou wilt ; thy will be done, and not mine.—Let us offer then, unto God our Father, ourselves for a sacrifice, whose savour, although it be evil in the nose of the world, yet it is good and agreeable unto God, by Jesus Christ his Son, in the faith of whom we do dedicate and offer ourselves, when we perceive our hour to approach.

‘ And, whatsoever betide, let us not fear men ; let us not fear them. God doth inhibit and forbid us in the same, saying, by his prophet, Fear them not, for I am with you ; and seeing God doth forbid us to fear men, can we fear them without sin ? No truly. To what purpose do we fear them ? Men of themselves can do nothing, and if at any time they have any power, the same only cometh unto them from God, and is given unto them only to accomplish the will of God. But peradventure ye will say to me that Jesus Christ himself, in the time of his cross, did fear death, and therefore it is no marvel though we do fear it, in whom is no such perfection and constancy. Truly the flesh doth always abuse herself with the example of Jesus Christ ; she doth abuse it, for she cannot rightfully use it, inasmuch as the flesh is in all ways repugnant unto the

CH. 34. spirit and the good will of God. Forasmuch as ye will herein follow Christ—well, I am con-
 A.D. 1557.
 February. tented—fear death, but fear it as he did fear it. If you will say that Christ had fear of death, consider the same also to be on such sort as the fear
 did not keep him back from the voluntary obedience of his Father, and from saying, with unfeigned lips, Thy will be done.

‘Ye will say, We fear not death for any fear we have to be damned, neither for any diffidence that we have of eternal life; but we fear death for the human understanding that we have of the great pain that some do suffer in dying, and especially in dying by fire; for we suppose that pain to surmount all patience. O fond flesh, thy voice is always full of love of thyself, and of a secret
 diffidence and mistrust of the Almighty power, wisdom, and goodness of God.’

While the true heroes of the age were fighting
 for freedom with the weapons of noble suffering,
 the world was about to recommence its own battles, with which it is less easy to sympathize.
 The attempt on Calais having failed, it became a question at the French court, whether, after having giving so just cause of quarrel to England, wisdom would not suggest an abandonment of the intention of recommencing the war with Philip. Noailles crossed to Paris in December, where the king questioned him whether Mary would be able to declare war. Noailles assured him, ‘that out of doubt she would not; for if she should send those whom she trusted out of the realm, then would they whom she trusted

not, not fail to be busy within the realm.* CH. 34.
 Reassured by the ambassador's opinion, Henry resumed his intentions. In March, the Duke of Guise led an army into Italy. The Pope recovered courage, defied Alva, and again laid claim to Naples; and it was to be seen now whether Noailles was right,—whether the English people would unite with the court to resent the French king's conduct sufficiently to permit Mary at last
 to join in the quarrel.

A.D. 1557.
 February.
 The French
 send an army into Italy, and war recom-
 mences between Philip and the Pope.

Philip, anxious and hopeful, paid England the respect of returning for a few weeks, and in the same month of March came over to sue to the council in person. The affair at Calais was a substantial ground for a rupture, but the attack,
 though intended, had not been actually made.
 The story might seem, to the suspicions of the country, to have been invented by the court;
 and, in other respects, Mary's injuries were not the injuries of the nation. The currency was still prostrate; the people in unexampled distress. The Flanders debts were as heavy as ever, and the queen had insisted on abandoning a fifth of her revenues. A war would inevitably be most unpopular. The attempt nevertheless was made. The queen produced the treaty of 1546, between England and the Empire; and, in compliance with its provisions, laid before the Privy Council a proposal, if not to declare war with France, yet to threaten a declaration, in the event of an invasion of the Netherlands.

Philip
 comes to England, to persuade
 the council
 to join
 against France.

The pretext
 is the treaty of 1546;

* Wotton to Petre: French MSS. bundle 13., State Paper Office.

CH. 34. The Privy Council considered the queen's request: their conclusion was not what she desired.

A.D. 1557.
 March.

But the obligation of that treaty
 having been suspended by the treaty
 of marriage,

The council
 declares
 that, for many reasons, the war may not be ventured.

The treaty of 1546, the council replied, had been abrogated by the treaty of marriage, so far as it might involve England in a war with France. 'Her Majesty would be unable to maintain a war, and, therefore, to say to the French king that she would aid her husband, according to the treaty, and not being able to perform it, indeed would be dishonourable, and many ways dangerous.' 'It was to be considered further, that, if by these means the realm should be drawn into war, the fault would be imputed to the King's Majesty.' 'The common people of the realm were at present many ways grieved—some pinched with famine, some for want of payment of money due to them, some discontented for matters of religion; and, generally, all yet tasting the smart of the late wars. It would be hard to have any aid of money of them. And in times past,' the council added, significantly, 'although the prince found himself able to make and maintain wars, yet the causes of those wars were opened for the most part in parliament.'*

Objections so decided and so just would have hardly been overcome, but for an injudicious enterprise of the refugees, under French auspices. The French court believed that, by keeping

* Answer of the Privy Council to the Queen's question whether England shall enter the wars with France.—Sloane MSS. 1786, British Museum.

Mary in alarm at home, they would make it the less easy for her to join in the war. They mistook the disposition of the people, who resented and detested the interference of France in their concerns.

CH. 34.

A.D. 1557.
April.

Among the exiles at the court of Paris, the most distinguished by birth, if not by ability, was Sir Thomas Stafford, Lord Stafford's second son, and grandson of the Duke of Buckingham who was put to death under Henry VIII. On the 27th of April, Wotton sent notice to the queen that Stafford had sailed from the mouth of the Seine with two vessels well manned and appointed. His destination was unknown; but it was understood that he intended to take some fortress on the English coast, and that the refugees, in a body, intended to follow him. Before Wotton's letter arrived, the scheme, such as it was, had been already executed. Stafford, with thirty Englishmen and one Frenchman, had surprised Scarborough Castle, and sent his proclamations through Yorkshire. He was come, he said, to deliver his country from foreign tyranny. He had sure evidence that an army of Spaniards was about to land, and that Philip intended to seize the crown by force. The queen, by her marriage with a stranger, had forfeited her own rights; and he himself, as the Protector of English liberty, intended to bestow the crown on the next rightful heir, and to restore all such acts, laws, liberties, and customs as were established in the time of that most prudent prince, King Henry VIII. 'He did not mind,' he thought it neces-

Sir Thomas
Stafford,
supported
by France,
seizes Scarborough
Castle,And invites
the people
to save England
from the Spaniards.

CH. 34. sary to add, 'to work his own advancement
 A.D. 1557. touching possession of the crown, but to restore
 May. the blood and house of the Staffords to its pristine estate, which had been wrongfully suppressed by Cardinal Wolsey.*

The landing of Edward IV., at Ravenspurg, had made any wild enterprise seem feasible, and Stafford had counted on the notorious hatred of the people for the queen.

Stafford
and his party are taken and executed.

But if the Spaniards meditated a descent upon England, it was not by adventurers like the refugees that their coming would be either prevented or avenged; and the good sense of the country had determined once for all to give no countenance to revolution supported by France. The occupation of Scarborough lasted two days, at the end of which Stafford and his whole party were taken by the Earl of Westmoreland. Thirty-two prisoners were sent to London; thirty-one were put to death; and the council reluctantly withdrew their opposition to the war. A hundred and forty thousand pounds were in the exchequer, being part of the subsidy granted by parliament to pay the crown debts.† With this the court

The council
consent to a declaration of war.

prepared to commence, trusting to fortune for the future. War was to be declared on the 7th of June, and, while seven thousand men were to cross the Channel and join Pembroke in the Low Countries,‡ Howard was to cruise with the fleet

An army is sent across the Channel, and
the fleet
goes to sea.

* Proclamation of Thomas Stafford, son to the Lord Henry, rightful Duke of Buckingham. —STYKE'S Memorials, vol. vi. p. 515.

† Exchequer Accounts: MS. Mary, Domestic, vol. xii. State Paper Office.

‡ Bitterly hating their work that they were sent upon, 'the

in the Channel, to use his discretion in annoying the enemy, and, if possible, to destroy the French ships at Dieppe.*

CH. 34.

A.D. 1557.
May.

Happy, however, in having succeeded in gratifying her husband, the queen brought at once upon herself a blow which she had little foreseen, and from a quarter from which an injury was most painful. In her desire to punish France for assisting her rebellious heretical subjects, she seemed to have forgotten that France had an ally beyond the Alps. No sooner did Paul IV. learn that England was about to declare on the side of Philip, than, under the plausible pretence that he could have no ambassador residing in a country with which he was at war, he resolved to gratify his old animosity against Cardinal Pole, and cancel his legation.

Paul IV., to punish
the queen,
resolves to cancel Pole's commission.

Sir Edward Karne, the English resident at Rome, waited on the Pope to remonstrate. He urged Paul to recollect how much the Holy See owed to the queen, and how dangerous it might be to re-open a wound imperfectly healed. The Pope at first was obstinate. At length he seemed so far inclined to yield as to say that, if the queen would herself expressly desire it, he would distinguish between her and her husband.† But the suspension of the legation, though not at first people went to the musters, said Sir Thomas Smith, with kerchiefs on their heads—they went to the wars hanging down their looks; they came from them as men dismayed and forlorn.— STYVE'S Life of Sir Thomas Smith, Appendix, p. 249.

* Instructions to the Lord Admiral: MS. Mary, Domestic vol. xi.

† Sir Edward Karne to the Queen: BURNET'S Collectanea.

CH. 34 published, was carried through the Consistory;
 A.D. 1557. and so ingeniously was it worded, that not only
 May. the formal and especial commission was declared
 at an end, but the legatine privileges, attached
 by immemorial custom to the archbishopric of Canterbury, were cancelled with it. The Pope chose to leave himself without representative,
 ordinary or extraordinary, at the English court.

The queen was in despair. Before Karne's letter reached her, she had heard what was impending, and she wrote a letter of passionate expostulation, in which she expatiated on her services to religion, and on the assistance which Pole had rendered her. She said that, in the unsettled condition of England, the presence of a legate with supreme authority was absolutely necessary; and she implored Paul to reconsider a decision so rash and so unkind.

The queen
 expostu-
 lates, and entreats
 the Pope to reconsider
 his intention.

The council
 protest
 also,

The council added their separate protest.*
 'They had heard with infinite grief that the legate was to be taken from them. There was no precedent for the recal of a legate who had been once commissioned, unless from fault of his own; and for themselves, they were unconscious of having misconducted themselves in any way since the reconciliation. Cardinal Pole had been the saviour of religion. Before

* Printed by STYVE, Memorials of the Reformation, vol.
 vi. p. 476, and described by him
 as a letter of the Parliament.
 But at this time there was no
 Parliament in existence; the last
 had been dissolved eighteen months before, the next did not meet till the ensuing January.

The queen's letter is dated the 21st May, and the letter which I suppose to have been from the council, and another, said also to have been from 'the nobility,'
 were evidently written under the same impression, and, at the same time, when the idea of the recall was new.

his coming to England, the queen, with the best intentions to do good, had failed to arrest the growth of heresy, and the name of the Holy See was held in detestation. Pole, the noblest and most distinguished of the cardinals, had made what was crooked straight; he had introduced reforms everywhere; in a few years the wound would heal, and all would be well. If, however, he were now removed, the convalescent, deserted too soon by his physician, would relapse, and be worse than before. They entreated his Holiness, therefore, to listen to them, and allow him to remain. When they were reconciled, the Pope then reigning had promised that the customary privileges and immunities of the English nation should be maintained. It was the special prerogative of English sovereigns to have a legate perpetually resident in the person of the Archbishop of Canterbury; and from immemorial time there was no record of any archbishop to whom the legatine character had not attached as of right. The queen, who had risked her life for the faith of the Church, did not deserve that the first exception should be made in her disfavour. The bishops did not deserve it. The few who, in the late times of trial, had remained faithful, did not deserve it. Even if the queen would consent and give way, they would themselves be obliged to remonstrate.*

CH. 34.

A.D. 1557.

May.
And ex-postulate on Pole's
merits towards the Holy See.

Legatine
authority
is immemorially
attached to the Archbishopric
of Canterbury.

Karne's letter produced a brief hope that the Pope would relent. But the partial promise of

* Letter to the Pope: STRYPE, | appear by whom they were
vol. vi. pp. 476-482. The let- | signed. It is not even certain
ters are not signed, nor does it | that they were sent.

CH. 34. reconsidering his resolution had been extorted
 A.D. 1557. from Paul, while it was uncertain whether Eng-
 May. land would actually join in the conflict; the intended declaration of war had in the interval
 become a reality, and the Pope, more indignant
 than ever, chose to consider Pole personally responsible for the queen's conduct. Since a point was made of the presence of a Papal legate in England, he was so far ready to give way; but so far only. The king left England the first week in July. Mary accompanied him to Dover, and there a Papal nuncio met her, bringing a commission by which Pole was reduced into the ordinary rank of archbishop; and the office of Papal representative was conferred on Peto, the Greenwich friar. For his objections to the present legate, the Pope gave the strange but wounding reason, that his orthodoxy was not above suspicion.

The Pope
will leave a legate in England,
but transfers the commission
from Pole
to Peto.

The queen
will not permit
Peto to act.

Pole submits, but protests in his own name and
in the
queen's.

The queen, with something of her father's temper in her, ordered the nuncio to return to Calais till she could again communicate with Rome. She interdicted Peto from accepting the commission, and desired Pole to continue to exercise his functions till the Pope had pronounced again a final resolution. Pole, however, was too faithful a child of the Church to disobey a Papal injunction; he relinquished his office, but he sent Ormaneto to Rome with his own entreaties and protests.

Never had a legate of the Holy See been treated as he was treated, he said; there was no
 precedent, therefore, to teach him how to act,

nor was ever charge of heresy urged with less CH. 34.
occasion than against one whose whole employment had been to recover souls to Christ and his A.D. 1557.
Church, and to cut off those that were obstinate July.
as rotten members. His services to the Church,
he passionately exclaimed, transcended far the services of any legate who had been employed for centuries, and, nevertheless, he found himself accused of heresy by the Vicar of Christ upon earth. Such an insult was unjust and unprovoked; and his Holiness should consider also what he was doing in bringing the queen, the mother of obedience, into heaviness and sorrow.
Mother of obedience the Queen of England
might well be called, whom God had made a mother of sons who were the joy of the whole Church. How was the Pope rewarding this sainted woman, when with the thunder of his voice he accused the king, her husband, of schism, and himself, the legate, of heresy?*

Scarcely in his whole troubled life had a calamity more agitating overtaken Reginald Pole. To maintain the supremacy of the successor of St. Peter, he had spent twenty years in treason to his native country. He had held up his sovereign to the execration of mankind for rejecting an authority which had rewarded him
with an act of enormous injustice; and to plead
his conscience of innocence before the world
against his spiritual sovereign, would be to commit the same crime of disobedience for which he

* Pole to the Pope: STYFFE'S Memorials, vol. vi. p. 34, &c.

CH. 34. had put to death Cranmer, and laboured to set
 A.D. 1557. Europe on fire. Most fatal, most subtle retri-July. bution—for he knew that he was accused without cause; he knew that the Pope after all was but a peevish, violent, and spiteful old man; he knew it—yet even to himself he could not admit his own conviction.

Fortune, however, seemed inclined for a time to make some amends to Mary in the results of the war.

Philip invades France,
 and be-
 sieges St.
 Quentin.

The Constable takes
 the field to save the town,

The French usually opened their summer campaigns by an advance into Lorraine or the Netherlands. This year their aggressive resources had been directed wholly into Italy, and at home they remained on the defensive. Philip, with creditable exertion, collected an army of 50,000
 men, to take advantage of the opportunity.
 Fixing his own residence at Cambray, he gave
 the command in the field to the Duke of Savoy;
 and Philibert, after having succeeded in distracting the attention of the enemy, and leading them to expect him in Champagne, turned suddenly into Picardy, and invested the town of St.
 Quentin. The garrison must soon have yielded,
 had not Coligny, the Admiral of France, broken through the siege lines and carried in reinforcements. Time was thus gained, and the Constable, eager to save a strong place, the possession of which would open to the Spaniards the road to Paris, advanced with all the force which
 he could collect, not meaning to risk a battle,
 but to throw provisions and further supplies of men into St. Quentin. Montmorency had but 20,000 men with him. His levies consisted of the reserved force of the kingdom—princes, peers, knights, gentlemen, with their personal retinues, the best blood in France. It was such an army as that which lost Agincourt, and a fate not very different was prepared for it.

CH. 34.

A.D. 1557.
August 10.

The Constable was forced by accident into an engagement, in which he had the disadvantage of position as well as of numbers. Mistaken movements caused a panic in the opening of the battle, and the almost instant result was a confused and hopeless rout. The Duke d'Enghien fell on the field with four thousand men; the Constable himself, the Duke de Montpensier, the Duke de Longueville, the Marshal St. André, three hundred gentlemen, and several thousand common soldiers, were taken; the defeat was irretrievably complete, and to the victors almost bloodless. The English did not share in the glory of the battle, for they were not present; but they arrived two days after to take part in the storming of St. Quentin, and to share, to their shame, in the sack and spoiling of the town. They gained no honour; but they were on the winning side. The victory was credited to the queen as a success, and was celebrated in London with processions, bonfires, and Te Deums.

And loses
a great battle.

Nor was the defeat at St. Quentin the only disaster which the French arms experienced. Henry sent in haste to Italy for the Duke of Guise to defend Paris, where Philibert was daily expected. Guise was already returning after a failure less conspicuous, but not less complete,

The Duke
of Guise,
having failed in Italy, returns to defend France.

CH. 34. than that of the Constable. The Pope had received him on his arrival with enthusiasm, but the promised Papal contingent for the campaign had not been provided; the Pope was contented to be the soul of the enterprise of which France was to furnish the body. Guise advanced alone for the conquest of Naples, and he found himself, like De Lautrec in 1528, baffled by an enemy who would not meet him in the field, and obliged to waste his time and the health of his army in a series of unsuccessful sieges, till in a few months the climate had done Alva's work. The French troops perished in thousands, and Guise at last drew off his thinned ranks and fell back on Rome. Here the news of St. Quentin reached him, and the duke, leaving Paul to his fate, amid a storm of mutual reproaches, hurried back to his country.

September.
The Pope
yields to Alva,
whom he receives in Rome, and
absolves.

The Pontiff had now no resource but to yield; and the piety of the Spaniards, whom he had compelled against their will to be his enemies, softened the ignominy of his compelled submission. Cardinal Caraffa and the Duke of Alva met at Cava, where, in a few words, it was agreed that his Holiness should relinquish his alliance with France, and cease to trouble the Colonnas. Alva, on his side, restored the Papal towns which he had taken; he went to Rome to ask pardon on his knees, in Philip's name, for the violence which he had used to his spiritual father; and the Pope gave him gracious absolution.

This bad business, which had tried Mary so severely, was thus well finished, and on the 6th of October, London was again illuminated for the peace between the king and the Papacy. But the shadow which had been thrown on Pole was maliciously permitted to remain unremoved; on him, perhaps from personal ill-feeling, Paul visited his own disappointment. With the return of peace there was no longer any plausible reason for the recal of the legation; Peto was dead, having survived his unpropitious honours but a few months: yet, unmoved by Pole's entreaties, the Pope refused to permit him to resume his legatine functions, except so far as they were inherent in the archbishopric. The odious accusation of heresy was not withdrawn; and the torturing charge was left to embitter the peace of mind, and poison the last days of the most faithful servant of the Church who was then living.*

CH. 34.

A.D. 1557.
October.
But he will not be reconciled to Pole, or restore his commission.

And again, though there was peace with the Pope, there was still war with France; there was still war with Scotland. The events which had taken place in Scotland will be related hereafter.

The war continues with France and Scotland.

* Pole's sufferings in consequence were really piteous. 'Your Holiness,' he wrote on the 30th of March, 1558, 'is taking my life from me when you take from me the reputation of orthodoxy. You told the English ambassador it was God's doing; God has told you, like Abraham, to kill your son; and that your Holiness intends that kind of death for me, I know far more certainly than Isaac seemed to know his father's purpose. When I see the fire and the knife in the hands of your Holiness, and the wood laid upon my shoulders,

there is no need for me to ask where is the victim.

'When I was yet a lamb, I gave myself as a sacrifice to the Pontiff, who chose me for a cardinal. Thus I thought of myself; thus I spoke when I lay prostrate before the altar. Little did I then think the time would come, when I should be offered up by my father's hands a second time, especially when the Bishop of Rochester was here hanging as a ram among the briars ready to be immolated,' &c. — Pole to the Pope: Epistolæ, vol. v. p. 31.

CH. 34. It is enough for the present to say that the Scots had been true as usual to their old allies; no sooner was an English army landed in France, than a Scotch army was wasting and burning on the Border. A second force had to be raised and kept in the field to meet them, and the scantily supplied Treasury was soon empty.

A. D. 1557.
November.

A forced loan is raised to meet the expenses.

Money had to be found somewhere. The harvest, happily, had been at last abundant, and wheat had fallen from 50 shillings a quarter to 4 or 5. The country was in a condition to lend, and a commission was sent out for a forced loan, calculated on the assessment of the last subsidy. Lists of the owners of property in each county were drawn out, with sums of money opposite to their names, and the collectors were directed 'to travail by all the best ways they might for obtaining the sums noted.' Persons found conformable were to receive acknowledgments. Should 'any be froward' they were to find securities to appear when called on before the Privy Council, or to be arrested on the spot and sent to London.* A hundred and ten thousand pounds were collected under the commission, in spite of outcry and resistance;† but it was not enough for the hungry consumption of the war, and the court was driven to call a parliament.

Parliament
is again to meet.

The writs went out at the beginning of December, accompanied with the usual circulars; to which the queen added a promise, that if the mayors and sheriffs* would consult her wishes she would remember their services. In a second address she said her pleasure was that when the Privy Council, or any of them within their jurisdiction, should recommend 'men of learning and wisdom,' their directions should 'be regarded and followed.'† Yet there was not perhaps any wish to have the House of Commons unfairly packed. Mary desired, probably with sincerity, 'to have the assembly of the most chiefest men in the realm for advice and counsel.'

* Commission for the Loan: MS. Mary, Domestic, vol. xi.

† Ibid. vol. xii.

CH. 34.

A.D. 1557.
December.

The sheriffs and mayors are admonished to see to the return of competent persons.

How the parliament would have acted in the circumstances under which the meeting was anticipated, is very uncertain. The intense un-

* The Queen to all sheriffs, mayors, &c.—For the well choosing of the knights of the shire and burgesses:

Trusty and well-beloved, we greet you well: and whereas, for certain great and weighty causes touching both the honour of Almighty God, and the wealth and good government of this our realm, we have summoned our High Court of Parliament, to be holden at Westminster, the 20th of January next: and forasmuch as we consider that a great part of the furthering of such things, as shall be treated in our said Parliament, and bringing them to good effect, shall consist in the well appointing and choosing of such as shall be knights of shires, citizens of any city, or burgesses of other towns corporate, we have thought good to require you to have good regard, and so far forth as in you may lie, to provide that such as shall be appointed may be men given to good order, Catholic, and discreet, and so qualified, as the antient law of this realm requireth; giving the freeholders, citizens, burgesses within our said county to understand, what our will and pleasure is in that behalf. Hereby as you shall do good service unto God and this your country, so shall you also do us right acceptable pleasure, which we shall consider towards you as any occasion may shew. Given under our signet, December 10, 1557.—MS. Mary, Domestic, vol. xii.

† MS. Ibid.

CH. 34. popularity of the war had been little relieved by the victory at St. Quentin, and the general state of suffering made a fresh demand for money infinitely grievous. But between the issue of the writs and the 20th of January a blow had fallen on England which left room for no other thought.

A. D. 1557.
 December.

For the last ten years the French had kept their eyes on Calais. The recovery of Boulogne was an insufficient retaliation for the disgrace which they had suffered in the loss of it, while the ill success with which the English maintained themselves in their new conquest, suggested the hope, and proved the possibility, of expelling them from the old. The occupation of a French fortress by a foreign power was a perpetual insult to the national pride; it was a memorial of evil times;
 while it gave England inconvenient authority in the 'narrow seas.' Scarcely a month had passed since Mary had been on the throne, without a hint
 from some quarter or other to the English Government to look well to Calais; and the recent plot
 for its surprise was but one of a series of schemes
 which had been successively formed and abandoned.

The French
 again cast
 their eyes
 on Calais.

In 1541 the defences of Guisnes, Hammes, and Calais, had been repaired by Henry VIII. The dykes had been cleared and enlarged, the embankments strengthened, and the sluices put in order.*
 But in the wasteful times of Edward, the works
 had fallen again into ruin; and Mary, straitened

The defences of the Pale
 are out of repair.

* A complete account of the repairs at Calais, with the cost of work, and the wages of the workmen, is printed in an appendix to the Chronicle of Calais, published by the Camden Society.

by debt, by a diminished revenue, and a supposed obligation to make good the losses of the clergy, had found neither means nor leisure to attend to them. CH. 34.
A.D. 1557.
December.

In the year 1500, the cost of maintaining the three fortresses was something less than 10,000*l.* a-year;* and the expense had been almost or entirely supported by the revenue of the Pale. The more extended fortifications had necessitated an increase in the garrison; two thousand men were now scarcely sufficient to man the works;† while, owing to bad government, and the growing anomaly of the English position, the wealthier inhabitants had migrated over the frontiers, and left the Pale to a scanty, wretched, starving population, who could scarcely extract from the soil sufficient for their own subsistence.‡ While the cost of the occupation was becoming greater, the means of meeting it became less. The country could no longer thrive in English hands, and it was time for the invaders to begone. The expense increases,

And the Pale is deserted by its wealthiest inhabitants.

The government in London, however, seemed, notwithstanding warnings, to be unable to con-

* Chronicle of Calais.

† Lord Grey to the Queen, June 13, 1557: Calais MSS. bundle 10, State Paper Office.

‡ In 1550, Sir John Mason wrote to the council, 'I have heard say that, not long sythen the Low Countries were able to set to the field 300 able men on horseback; I think there lacketh of that number at this present a great many, the occasion whereof, by the report of the king's ministers on this side, is for that the king's lands are so rased, as no man is able to live thereupon unless it is a sort of poor dryvells, that must dig their living with their nails out of the ground, and be not able scarce to maintain a jade to carry their corn to market.'—French MSS. Ed. VI. bundle 9.

CH. 34. ceive the loss of so old a possession to be a possibility; and Calais shared the persevering neglect to which the temporal interests of the realm were subjected. The near escape from the Dudley treason created a momentary improvement. The arrears of wages were paid up, and the garrison was increased. Yet a few months after, when war was on the point of being declared, there were but two hundred men in Guisnes, a number inadequate to defend even the castle; and although the French fleet at that time commanded the Channel, Calais contained provisions to last but for a few weeks.* Lord Grey, the governor of Guisnes, reported in June, after the declaration, that the French were collecting in strength in the neighbourhood, and that unless he was reinforced, he was at their mercy. A small detachment was sent over in consequence of Grey's letter; but on the 2nd of July Sir Thomas Cornwallis informed the queen that the numbers were still inadequate. 'The enemy,' Cornwallis said, 'perceiving' our weakness, maketh daily attempts upon your subjects, who are much abashed to see the courage of your enemies, whom they are not able to hurt nor yet defend themselves.' He entreated that a larger force should be sent immediately, and maintained in the Pale during the war. The charge would be great, but the peril would be greater if the men were not provided; and as her Majesty had been pleased to

A.D. 1557.
December.

The English Government neglect to keep adequate supplies in the fortresses.

Sir Thomas Cornwallis warns the queen of the weakness of the garrison.

* Calais MSS., bundle 10.

enter into the war, her honour must be more considered than her treasure.* CH. 34.

The arrival of the army under Pembroke removed the immediate ground for alarm; and after the defeat of the French, the danger was supposed to be over altogether. The queen was frightened at the expenses which she was incurring, and again allowed the establishment to sink below the legitimate level. Lord Wentworth was left at Calais with not more than five hundred men. Grey had something more than a thousand at Guisnes, but a part only were English; the rest were Burgundians and Spaniards. More unfortunately also, a proclamation had forbidden the export of corn in England, from which Calais had not been excepted. Guisnes and Hammes depended for their supplies on Calais, and by the middle of the winter there was an actual scarcity of food.†

A.D. 1557.
December.

But, to avoid the expense, the queen does not increase them sufficiently.

Up to the middle of December, notwithstanding, there were no external symptoms to create uneasiness; military movements lay under the usual stagnation of winter, and except a few detachments on the frontiers of the Pale, who gave trouble by marauding excursions, the French

* Cornwallis to the Queen: Calais MSS. bundle 10.

† When all your Majesty's pieces on this side make account to be furnished of victuals and other necessaries from hence, it is so that of victuals your Highness hath presently none here, and the town hath none; by reason that the restraint in the realm hath been so strait, and the victuallers as were wont to bring daily hither good quantities of butter, cheese, bacon, wheat, and other things, might not of late be suffered to have any recourse hither, whereby is grown a very great scarcity.—Wentworth to the Queen: Calais MSS., bundle 10.

Сн. 34.
 A.D. 1557.
 Dec. 1.
 Grey reports a successful expedition for
 the destruction of a French detachment.

appeared to be resting in profound repose. On the 1st of December, the Governor of Guisnes reported an expedition for the destruction of one of their outlying parties, which had been accomplished with ominous cruelty.

‘I advertised your Grace,’ Lord Grey wrote to the queen, ‘how I purposed to make a journey to a church called Bushing, strongly fortified by the enemy, much annoying this your Majesty’s frontier. It may please your Majesty, upon Monday last, at nine of the clock at night, having with me Mr. Aucher marshal of Calais, Mr. Alexander captain of Newnham Bridge, Sir Henry Palmer, my son,* and my cousin Louis Dives, with such horsemen and footmen as could be conveniently spared abroad in service, leaving your Majesty’s pieces in surety, I took my journey towards the said Bushing, and carried with me two cannon and a sacre, for that both the weather and the ways served well to the purpose, and next morning came thither before day. And having before our coming enclosed the said Bushing with two hundred footmen harquebuziers, I sent an officer to summon the same in the King’s Highness, and your Majesty’s name; whereunto the captain there, a man of good estimation, who the day before was sent there with twelve men by M. Senarpont, captain of Boulogne, answered that he was not minded to render, but would keep it with such men as he had, which were forty in number or thereabouts,

* Sir Arthur Grey.

even to the death; and further said, if their fortune was so to lose their lives, he knew that the king his master had more men alive to serve, with many other words of French bravery. Upon this answer, I caused the gunners to bring up their artillery to plank, and then shot off immediately ten or twelve times. But yet for all this they would not yield. At length, when the cannon had made an indifferent breach, the Frenchmen made signs to parley, and would gladly have rendered; but I again, weighing it not meet to abuse your Majesty's service therein, and having Sir H. Palmer there hurt, and some others of my men, refused to receive them, and, according to the law of arms, put as many of them to the sword as could be gotten at the entry of the breach, and all the rest were blown up with the steeple at the rasing thereof, and so all slain.*

CH. 34.

A.D. 1557.
December.He takes a
small fort,
and puts
the garrison to the sword.

The law of arms forbade the defence of a fort not rationally defensible; but it was over hardly construed against a gallant gentleman. Grey was a fierce, stern man. It was Grey who hung the priests in Oxfordshire from their Church towers. It was Grey who led fiery charge upon the Scots at Musselburgh, and with a pike wound, which laid open cheek, tongue, and palate, he 'pursued out the chase,' till, choked by heat, dust, and his own blood, he was near falling under his horse's feet.†

* Grey to the Queen: Calais MSS., bundle 10.

† He was held up by the Earl of Warwick, who sprang from his own horse, and 'did lift a firkin of ale' to Grey's mouth. Life of Lord Grey of Wilton, by his son.

CH. 34.

A.D. 1557.

Dec. 22.

A vague
rumour of alarm
reaches Guineses.

Dec. 27.

A French
force collects in the neighbourhood. The English
commanders write for assistance.

Three weeks passed, and still the French had made no sign. On the 22nd an indistinct rumour came to Guisnes that danger was near. The frost had set in; the low damp ground was hard, the dykes were frozen; and in sending notice of the report to England, Grey said that Calais was unprovided with food; Guisnes contained a few droves of cattle brought in by forays over the frontier,* but no corn. On the 27th, the intelligence became more distinct and more alarming. The Duke of Guise was at Compiègne. A force of uncertain magnitude, but known to be large, had suddenly appeared at Abbeville. Something evidently was intended, and something on a scale which the English commanders felt ill prepared to encounter. In a hurried council of war held at Calais, it was resolved to make no attempt to meet the enemy in the field until the arrival of reinforcements, which were written for in pressing haste.†

But the foes with whom they had to deal knew their condition, and were as well aware as themselves that success depended on rapidity. Had the queen paid attention to Grey's despatch of the 22nd there was time to have trebled the garrison and thrown in supplies; but it was vague, and no notice was taken of it. The joint letter of Grey and Wentworth written on the 27th, was in London in two days, and there were ships at Portsmouth and in the Thames, which ought to have been ready for sea at a moment's warning. Orders were sent to prepare; the Earl of Rutland was commissioned to raise men; and the queen, though without sending men, sent a courier with encouragements and promises. But when every moment was precious, a fatal slowness, and more fatal irresolution hung about the movements of the government. On the 29th Wentworth wrote again, that the French were certainly arming and might be looked for immediately. On the 31st, the queen, deceived probably by some emissary of Guise, replied, that 'she had intelligence that no enterprise was intended against Calais or the Pale,' and that she had therefore countermanded the reinforcements.*

* Grey to the Queen: Calais MSS., bundle 10.

† Wentworth and Grey to the Queen: Ibid.

CH. 34.

A.D. 1557.

Dec. 29.

The queen orders men to be raised.

Lord Wentworth again writes for help, but the queen countermands the musters, believing the alarm ill founded.

The letter containing the death sentence, for it was nothing less, of English rule in Calais was crossed on the way by another from Grey, in which he informed the queen that there were thirty or forty vessels in the harbour at Hambletue, two fitted as floating batteries, the rest loaded with hurdles, ladders, and other materials for a siege. Four-and-twenty thousand men were in the camp above Boulogne; and their mark he knew to be Calais. For himself, he would defend his charge to the death; but help must be sent instantly, or it would be too late to be of use.

The afternoon of the same day, December 31, he added, in a postscript, that flying companies of the French were at that moment before Guisnes; part of the garrison had been out to

Dec. 31.
The French are under the wall of Guisnes.

* The Queen to Wentworth: Calais MSS. bundle 10.

CH. 34. skirmish, but had been driven in by numbers;
 the whole country was alive with troops.

A.D. 1558.
 Jan. 1.

Calais is besieged.

The next morning Wentworth reported to the same purpose, that, on the land side, Calais was then invested. The sea was still open, and the forts at the mouth of the harbour on the Rysbank were yet in his hands. Heavy siege cannon, however, were said to be on their way from Boulogne, and it was uncertain how long he could hold them.

The defences of Calais towards the land, though in bad repair, had been laid out with the best engineering skill of the time. The country was intersected with deep muddy ditches; the roads were causeways, and at the bridges were bulwarks and cannon. Guisnes, which was three miles from Calais, was connected with it by a line of small forts and 'turnpikes.' Hammes lay between the two, equidistant from both. Towards the sea the long line of low sandhills, rising in front of the harbour to the Rysbank, formed a natural pier; and on the Rysbank was the castle, which commanded the entrance and the town. The possession of the Rysbank was the possession of Calais.

The approaches to the sandhills were commanded by a bulwark towards the south-west called the Sandgate, and further inland by a large work called Newnham Bridge. At this last place were sluices, through which, at high water, the sea could be let in over the marshes. If done effectually, the town could by this means be effectually protected; but unfortunately, owing to the bad condition of the banks, the sea water leaked in from the high levels to the wells and reservoirs in Calais.

CH. 34.

A.D. 1558.
Jan. 1.

The night of the 1st of January the French remained quiet; with the morning they advanced in force upon Newnham Bridge. An advanced party of English archers and musketeers who were outside the gate were driven in, and the enemy pushed in pursuit so close under the walls that the heavy guns could not be depressed to touch them. The English, however, bored holes through the gates with augers, fired their muskets through them, and so forced their assailants back. Towards Hammes and Guisnes the sea was let in, and the French, finding themselves up to their waists in water, and the tide still rising, retreated on that side also. Wentworth wrote in the afternoon in high spirits at the result of the first attack. The brewers were set to work to fill their vats with fresh water, that full advantage might be taken of the next tide. Working parties were sent to cut the sluices, and the English commander felt confident that if help was on the way, or could now be looked for, he could keep his charge secure. But the enemy, he said, were now thirty thousand strong; Guise had taken the Sandgate, and upwards of a hundred boats were passing backwards and forwards to Boulogne and Hambletue, bringing stores and ammunition.* If the queen had a body of men

Jan. 2.
The French
attack
Newnham
Bridge,
and are driven back.The sea
water is let
in, and Wentworth
hopes to save Calais.But Guise
takes the Sandgate,

* 'Surely,' Wentworth wrote to the queen, 'if your Majesty's ships had been on the shore, they might either have letted this voyage, or, at the least, very much hindered it, and not unlike

CH. 34. in readiness, they should come without delay.
 A.D. 1558. If she was unprepared, 'the passages should be
 Jan. 3. thrown open,' and 'liberty be proclaimed for all
 And Went- men to come that would bring sufficient victuals worth for themselves;' thus, he 'was of opinion that again im- there would be enough with more speed than plores that help may be sent. would be made by order.'

The Rys- So far Wentworth had written. While the pen bank is was in his hand, a message reached him, that the taken. French, without waiting for their guns, were streaming up over the Rysbank, and laying ladders against the walls of the fort. He had but time to close his letter, and send his swiftest boat out of the harbour with it, when the castle was won, and ingress and egress at an end. The same evening, the heavy guns came from Boulogne, and for two days and nights the town was fired upon incessantly from the sandbank, and from 'St. Peter's Heath.'

Grey writes The fate of Calais was now a question of that if hours; Wentworth had but 500 men to repel an Guisnes army, and he was without provisions. Calais and Calais was probably gone, but Guisnes might be saved;
 are to be Guisnes could be relieved with a great effort saved, an out of the Netherlands. On the night of the army must 4th, Grey found means to send a letter
 now be sent.

to have distressed them, being only small boats. Their ordnance that comes shall be conveyed in the same sort. It may therefore please your Majesty to consider it. I am, as a man may be, most sure that they will first attempt upon Rysbank, and that way chiefly assail the town.

Marry, I think that they lie hovering in the country for the coming of their great artillery,
 and also to be masters of the sea,
 and therefore I trust your Highness will haste over all things necessary with all expedition.—
 Wentworth to the Queen: Calais
MSS., bundle 10.

through the French lines to England. 'The enemy,' he said, 'were now in possession of Calais harbour, and all the country between Calais and Guisnes.' He was now 'clean cut off from all relief and aid which he looked to have;' and there 'was no other way for the succour of Calais' and the other fortresses, but 'a power of men out of England or from the King's Majesty, or from both,' either to force the French into a battle or to raise the siege. Come what would, he would himself do the duty of a faithful subject, and keep the castle while man could hold it.*

CH. 34.

A.D. 1558.
Jan. 3.

The court, which had been incredulous of danger till it had appeared, was now paralysed by the greatness of it. Definite orders to collect troops were not issued till the 2nd of January. The Earl of Rutland galloped the same day to Dover, where the musters were to meet, flung himself into the first boat that he found, without waiting for them, and was half-way across the Channel when he was met by the news of the loss of the Rysbank.† Rutland therefore returned to Dover, happy so far to have escaped sharing the fate of Wentworth, which his single presence could not have averted. The next day, the 3rd, parties of men came in slowly from Kent and Sussex; but so vague had been the language of the pro-

The English Government begin slowly to move. The musters come in unarmed.

* Grey to the Queen: Calais MSS. The letter was dated January 4, seven o'clock at night. The messenger was to carry it to Gravelines under cover of darkness. It is endorsed, 'Haste, haste, haste! Post haste for thy life, for thy life.'

† Rutland to the Queen: Calais MSS.

CH. 34. clamation, that they came without arms; and
 although the country was at war with France,
 A.D. 1558.
 Jan. 4. there were no arms with which to provide them, either in Deal, Dover, or Sandwich. Again, so indistinct had been Rutland's orders, that although a few hundred men did come in at last tolerably well equipped, and the Prince of Savoy
 had collected some companies of Spaniards at Gravelines, and had sent word to Dover for the English to join him, Rutland was now obliged to refer to London for permission to go over. On the 7th, permission came; it was found by that time, or supposed to be found, that the queen's ships were none of them seaworthy, and an order of council came out to press all competent merchant ships
 and all able seamen everywhere, for the queen's service.* Rutland contrived at last, by vigorous efforts, to collect a few hoys and boats, but the French had by this time ships-of-war in cooperation with them, and he could but approach the French coast near enough to see that he could venture no nearer, and again to return.†

The queen's ships are found un-seaworthy.

Jan. 7.

He would have been too late to save Calais
 at that time, however, even if he had succeeded in crossing.

Jan. 6.
 Calais is taken.

The day preceding, the 6th of January, after a furious cannonade, Guise had stormed the castle.
 The English had attempted to blow it up when they could not save it, but their powder train was wetted, and they failed. The Spaniards, for once

* MS. Council Records.

† MS. Mary, Domestic, vol. xi.

honourably careful of English interests, came along the shore from Gravelines alone, since no one joined them from England, and attempted in the face of overwhelming odds to force their way into the town: but they were driven back, and Wentworth, feeling that further resistance would lead to useless slaughter, demanded a parley, and after a short discussion accepted the terms of surrender offered by Guise. The garrison and the inhabitants of Calais, amounting in all, men, women, and children, to 5000 souls, were permitted to retire to England with their lives, and nothing more. Wentworth and fifty others were to remain prisoners; the town, with all that it contained, was to be given up to the conquerors.

CH. 34.
A.D. 1558.
Jan. 6.

On these conditions the English laid down their arms and the French troops entered. The spoil was enormous, and the plunder of St. Quentin was not unjustly revenged; jewels, plate, and money were deposited on the altars of the churches, and the inhabitants, carrying with them the clothes which they wore, were sent as homeless beggars in the ensuing week across the Channel.

Then only, when it was too late, the queen roused herself. As soon as Calais had definitely fallen, all the English counties were called on by proclamation to contribute their musters. Then all was haste, eagerness, impetuosity; those who had money were to provide for those who had none, till 'order could be taken.'

The queen is at length roused. The musters all over England are called out,

The Vice-Admiral, Sir William Woodhouse, was directed to go instantly to sea, pressing everything

CH. 34

A.D. 1558.

Jan. 7.

And
ordered to march to Dover,
where the fleet is waiting for them.

that would float, and promising indemnity to the owners in the queen's name. Thirty thousand men were rapidly on their way to the coast: the weather had all along been clear and frosty, with calms and light east winds, and the sea off Dover was swiftly covered with a miscellaneous crowd of vessels. On the 10th came the queen's command for the army to cross to Dunkirk, join the Duke of Savoy, and save Guisnes.

Jan. 10.

The weather
changes,
and the
fleet is destroyed or dispersed.

But the opportunity which had been long offered, and long neglected, was now altogether gone; the ships were ready, troops came, and arms came, but a change of weather came also, and westerly gales and storms. On the night of the 10th a gale blew up from the south-west which raged for four days: such vessels as could face the sea, slipped their moorings, and made their way into the Thames with loss of spars and rigging; the hulls of the rest strewed Dover beach with wrecks, or were swallowed in the quicksands of the Goodwin.

The queen
desponds,
and sends
the muster
home.

The effect of this last misfortune on the queen was to produce utter prostration. Storms may rise, vessels may be wrecked, and excellent enterprises may suffer hindrance, by the common laws or common chances of things; but the queen in every large occurrence imagined a miracle; Heaven she believed was against her. Though Guisnes was yet standing, she ordered Woodhouse to collect the ships again in the Thames, 'forasmuch as the principal cause of their sending forth had ceased;'

* The Queen to Sir William Woodhouse, January 12: MS. Mary, Domestic, vol. xii.

and on the 13th, she counter-ordered the musters, and sent home all the troops which had arrived at Dover.*

CH. 34.

A.D. 1558.
Jan. 10.

Having given way to despondency, the court should have communicated with Grey, and directed him to make terms for himself and the garrisons of Guisnes and Hammes. In the latter place there was but a small detachment; but at Guisnes were eleven hundred men, who might lose their lives in a desperate and now useless defence. The disaster, however, had taken away the power of thinking or resolving upon anything.

It must be said for Philip that he recognised more clearly and discharged more faithfully the duty of an English sovereign than the queen or the queen's advisers. Spanish and Burgundian troops were called under arms as fast as possible; and when he heard of the gale he sent ships from Antwerp and Dunkirk to bring across the English army. But when his transports arrived at Dover they found the men all gone. Proclamations went out on the 17th to call them back;† but two days after there was a counter panic and a dread of invasion, and the perplexed levies were again told that they must remain at home. So it went on to the end of the month; the resolution of one day alternated with the hesitation of the next, and nothing was done.

Philip
sends ships
to Dover
for them to find them
gone.

The queen's government had lost their heads. Philip having done his own part, did not feel it

* Circular for Staying of the Musters: MS. Mary, Domestic, vol. xii.

† Ibid. January 17.

CH. 34. incumbent on him to risk a battle with inferior numbers, when those who were more nearly concerned were contented to be supine. Guisnes, therefore, and its defenders, were left to their fate.

A.D. 1558.
January.
Guisnes is left to its fate.

On Thursday, the 13th, the Duke of Guise appeared before the gates. The garrison could have been starved out in a month, but Guise gave England credit for energy, and would not run the risk of a blockade. To reduce the extent of his lines, Grey abandoned the town, burnt the houses, and withdrew into the castle. The French made their approaches in form. On the morning of Monday the 17th they opened fire from two heavily armed batteries, and by the middle of the day they had silenced the English guns, and made a breach which they thought practicable. A storming party made an attempt: after sharp fighting the advanced columns had to retreat; but as they drew back the batteries reopened, and so effectively, that the coming on of night alone saved the English from being driven at once, and on the spot, from their defences. The walls were of the old sort, constructed when the art of gunnery was in its infancy, and crumbled to ruins before the heavy cannon which had come lately into use.

Jan. 17.
It is attacked by
the Duke of Guise.

After a bombardment of
three days,

Under shelter of the darkness earthworks were thrown up, which proved a better protection; but the French on their side planted other batteries, and all Tuesday and Wednesday the terrible bombardment was continued. The old walls were swept away; the ditch was choked with the rubbish, and was but a foot in depth; the French trenches had been advanced close to its edge, and on Wednesday afternoon, twelve companies of Gascons and Swiss again dashed at the breaches. The Gascons were the first; the Swiss followed 'with a stately leisure;' and a hand to hand fight began all along the English works. The guns from a single tower which had been left standing causing loss to the assailants, it was destroyed by the batteries. The fight continued till night, when darkness as before put an end to it.

CH. 34.

A.D. 1558.
Jan. 19.

The French troops attempt a storm.

The earthworks could be again repaired, but the powder began to fail, and this loss was irreparable. Lord Grey, going his rounds in the dark, trod upon a sword point, and was wounded in the foot. The daylight brought the enemy again, who now succeeded in making themselves masters of the outer line of defence. Grey, crippled as he was, when he saw his men give way, sprung to the top of the rampart, 'wishing God that some shot would take him.' A soldier caught him by the scarf and pulled him down, and all that was left of the garrison fell back, carrying their commander with them into the keep. The gate was rammed close, but Guise could now finish his work at his leisure, and had the English at his mercy. He sent a trumpeter in the evening to propose a parley, and the soldiers insisted that if reasonable terms could be had, they should be accepted. The extremity of the position was obvious, and Grey, as we have seen, was no stranger to the law of arms in such cases. Hostages were exchanged, and the next

Lord Grey is wounded, and the English are driven into the citadel.

Jan. 20.

Guise offers terms,

CH. 34. morning the two commanders met in the French camp.

A.D. 1558.
Jan. 30.

Better terms were offered by Guise than had been granted to Calais—Grey, Sir Henry Palmer, and a few officers should consider themselves prisoners; the rest of the garrison might depart with their arms, and ‘every man a crown in his purse.’ Grey, however, demanded that they should march out with their colours flying; Guise refused, and after an hour’s discussion they separated without a conclusion.

But the soldiers were insensible to nice distinctions; if they had the reality, they were not particular about the form. Grey lectured them on the duties of honour; for his part, he said, he would rather die under the red cross than lose it.

Which the soldiers
compel Lord Grey
to accept.

The soldiers replied that their case was desperate; they would not be thrust into butchery or sell their lives for vain glory. The dispute was at its height when the Swiss troops began to lay ladders to the walls; the English refused to strike another blow; and Grey, on his own rule, would have deserved to be executed had he persisted longer.

The English march
out, and their last hold on French soil
is lost.

Guise’s terms were accepted. He had lived to repay England for his spear wound at Boulogne, and the last remnant of the conquests of the Plantagenets was gone.

Measured by substantial value, the loss of Calais was a gain. English princes were never again to lay claim to the crown of France, and the possession of a fortress on French soil was a perpetual irritation. But Calais was called the ‘brightest jewel in the English crown.’ A jewel CH. 34.

it was, useless, costly, but dearly prized. Over A.D. 1558.
the gate of Calais had once stood the insolent Jan. 20.
inscription:—

‘Then shall the Frenchmen Calais win,
When iron and lead like cork shall swim;’

and the Frenchmen had won it, won it in fair
and gallant fight.

If Spain should rise suddenly into her ancient strength and tear Gibraltar from us, our mortification would be faint, compared to the anguish
of humiliated pride with which the loss of Calais
distracted the subjects of Queen Mary.

CHAPTER XXXV.

DEATH OF MARY.

CH. 35.
A.D. 1558.
Jan. 20.

THE queen would probably have found the parliament which met on the 20th of January little better disposed towards her than its predecessor. The subsidy which should have paid the crown debts had gone as the opposition had foretold, and the country had been dragged after all into the war so long dreaded and so much deprecated. The forced loan of 100,000*l.* had followed, and money was again wanted.

Parliament undertakes to provide for the national safety.

But ordinary occasions of discontent disappeared in the enormous misfortune of the loss of Calais; or rather, the loss of Calais had so humbled the nation in its own eyes, that it expected to be overrun with French armies in the approaching summer. The Church had thriven under Mary's munificence, but every other interest had been recklessly sacrificed. The fortresses were without arms, the ships were unfit for service, the coast was defenceless. The parliament postponed their complaints till the national safety had been provided for.

On the 26th, a committee, composed of thirty members of both Houses, met to consider the crisis.* 'That no way or policy should be undevised or not thought upon,' they divided themselves into three sub-committees; and after three days' separate consultation the thirty met again, and agreed to recommend the heaviest subsidy which had been ever granted to an English sovereign, equivalent in modern computation to an income-tax of 20 per cent. for two years. If levied fairly such a tax would have yielded a large return. Michele, the Venetian, says that many London merchants were worth as much as 60,000*l.* in money; the graziers and the merchants had made fortunes while the people had starved. But either from hatred of the government, or else from meanness of disposition, the money-making classes generally could not be expected to communicate the extent of their possessions. The landowners, truly or falsely, declared that, 'for the most part, they received no more rent than they were wont to receive,' 'yet, paying for everything, they provided thrice as much by reason of the baseness of the money.'† It was calculated that the annual proceeds of the subsidy would be no more than 140,000*l.*;‡ and even this the House of Commons declared that the country would not bear for more than one year. They did not choose perhaps to leave the

CH. 35.

A.D. 1558.

January.

A committee of the two Houses recommend a large subsidy.

* Commons Journals.

† Ibid. The famous graziers and other people, how well willing soever they be taken to be, will not be known of their wealth, and by miscontentment of their loss, be grown stubborn and liberal of talk.—

The Council to Philip: Cotton.MSS. Titus, B. 2.‡ Estimate of the Money to be provided for the Furniture and Charges of the War: MS. Mary, Domestic, vol. xii.

CH. 35. queen at liberty to abuse their confidence by giving her the full grant to squander on the clergy. They were unanimous that the country must and should be defended. They admitted that the sum which they were ready to vote would fall short of the indispensable outlay; nevertheless, when the report of the committee was laid before them they cut it down to half. They agreed to give four shillings in the pound for one year, and to pay it all at Midsummer. 'They entreated her Majesty to stay the demanding of more' until another session of parliament. Should circumstances then require it, they promised that they would add whatever might be necessary; but, for the present, 'if any invasion should be in the realm, or if the enemy should seek to annoy them at home, they would have to employ themselves with all their powers, which would not be without their great charges.'*

A.D. 1558.
January.
The Commons cut down the recommendation of the committee,

Promising to give more, if necessary, another year.

February.

Philip proposes to take the field to recover Calais.

The English council, considering the state of public feeling and the cost of the campaign, will not consent.

The resolution of parliament decided the council in the course which they must pursue with respect to Calais. Philip, unable to prevent the catastrophe alone, proposed to take the field at once with a united army of English and Spaniards, to avenge it, and effect a recapture. He laid his plans before the council. The council, in reply, thanked his Majesty for his good affection towards the realm; they would have accepted his offer on their knees had it been possible, but the state of England obliged them to decline. The enemy, after the time which had been allowed them, 'would be in such strength that it was doubtful if by force alone they could be expelled.' If England sent out an army, it could not send less than twenty thousand men; and the troops would go unwillingly upon a service for which they had no heart, at a time of year when they were unused to exposure. Before the year was out 150,000*l.* at the lowest would have to be spent in keeping the musters of the country under arms. The navy and the defences of the coast and of the isles, would cost 200,000*l.*, without including the losses of cannon and military stores at Guisnes and Calais, which would have to be made good. The campaign which Philip proposed could not cost less than a further 170,000*l.; and so much money could not be had 'without the people should have strange impositions set upon them, which they would not bear.' There was but 'a wan hope of recovering Calais,' and 'inconveniences might follow' if the attempt was made and failed.

* Discourse on the Order that was used in Granting of the Subsidy: MS. Mary, Domestic, vol. xii.

CH. 35.
A.D. 1558.
February.

'The people have only in their heads,' the council added, 'the defence of the realm by land and sea.' The hated connexion with Spain had produced all the evils which the opponents of the marriage had foretold, and no good was expected from any enterprise pursued in common with Philip. Prone as the English were to explain events by supernatural causes, they saw, like the queen, in the misfortunes which had haunted her, an evidence that Heaven was not on her side, and

The people
care only to defend the country.

* The Council to Philip: Cotton. MSS. Titus, B. 2.

CH. 35. they despaired of success in anything until it could be undertaken under better auspices. They would take care of themselves at home, and they would do no more. In reducing the subsidy, the Commons promised to defend the country 'with the residue of their goods and life,' to 'provide every man armour and weapons according to his ability,' and to insist by a special law that it should be done.*

A.D. 1558.
February.

The country is called on to arm.

Every peer, knight, or gentleman, with an income above 1000*l.* a-year, was called on to furnish sixteen horses, with steel harness, forty corslets, coats of mail, and morions, thirty long-bows, with sheaves of arrows, and as many steel caps, halberds, blackbills, and haquebuts. All English subjects, in a descending scale, were required to arm others or arm themselves according to their property.†

Every able-bodied man, between 16 and 60, is ordered to hold himself in readiness.

In the levies of the past summer, men had shrunk from service, and muster-masters, after the fashion of Falstaff, had taken bribes to excuse them. On the present occasion no excuse was to be taken, and every able-bodied man, of any rank, from sixteen to sixty, was to be ready to take arms when called upon, and join his officers, under pain of death.‡ With these essential orders, the business of the legislature ended, and parliament was prorogued on the 7th of March till the following November.

The chief immediate difficulty was to find

* MS. Mary, Domestic, vol. xii.

† 4 and 5 Philip and Mary, statute 2.

‡ Ibid. statute 3.

money for present necessities. The loan was CH. 35.
 gone. The subsidy would not come in for six months. Englefield, Waldegrave, Petre, Baker, A.D. 1558.
 and Sir Walter Mildmay, were formed into a March 13.
 permanent committee of ways and means, with instructions to sit daily 'till some device had been arrived at.* Sir Thomas Gresham was sent again to Antwerp to borrow 200,000*l.*, if Money is possible, at fourteen per cent.† The queen ap- again bor-plied in person for a loan to the citizens of rowed in London. For security, she offered to bind the Flanders.
 crown lands, 'so assuredly as they themselves
 could cause to be devised;‡ and she promised,
 further, that, if she could legally do it, she would dispense in their favour with the statute for the limitation of usury.

To this last appeal the corporation responded The city of
 with a loan of 20,000*l.*, at twelve per cent.; the London Merchant Adventurers contributed 18,000*l.* more; makes a and Gresham sent from Flanders from time to loan.
 time whatever he could obtain. In this way
 dockyards and armouries were set in activity,
 and the castles on the coast were repaired.

Yet with the masses the work of arming went forward languidly. The nation was heavy at The nation heart, and it was in vain that the noblemen and is despon-gentlemen endeavoured to raise men's spirits; dent.

* MS. Mary, Domestic, vol. xii.

† Flanders MSS. Mary. The aggregate of the debts to the Flanders Jews, which Elizabeth inherited, cannot be prudently guessed at; and I have not yet found any complete account on which I can rely. It cost her, however, fifteen years of economy to pay them off.

‡ Queen Mary to the Aldermen of the City of London: MS. Ibid.

CH. 35. the black incubus of the priesthood sate upon them like a nightmare. The burnings had been suspended while parliament was in session. On the 28th of March the work began again, and Cuthbert Simson, the minister of a Protestant congregation, was put to death in Smithfield, having been first racked to extort from him the names of his supporters;* on the same day Reginald Pole, to clear himself of the charge of heresy, sent a fresh commission to Harpsfeld, to purge the diocese of Canterbury;† and the people, sick to their very souls at the abominable spectacles which were thrust before them, sank into a sullen despondency.

A.D. 1558.
March.
The persecution continues, and Pole issues a fresh commission.

The musters for Derbyshire were set down at fifteen hundred. Lord Shrewsbury raised four hundred from among his own dependents on his estates. The magistrates declared that, owing to death, want, and waste of means in the war of the last year, the 'poor little county' could provide but one hundred more.

The musters break up or mutiny.

The exiles in Germany invite the people to rebellion.

The musters in Devonshire broke up and went to their homes. The musters in Lincolnshire mutinied. The ringleaders in both counties were immediately hanged;‡ yet the loyalty was none the greater. The exiled divines in Germany, believing that the people were at last ripe for insurrection, called on them to rise and put down the tyranny which was crushing them. Goodman published a tract on the obedience of † STREYKE'S Memorials, vol. vi. p. 120.

* FOXE: BURNET.

‡ Privy Council Register, MS. Mary.

subjects, and John Knox blew his 'First Blast CH. 35.
 against the Monstrous Regimen of Women.' A.D. 1558.
 The queen, as if the ordinary laws of the April.
 country had no existence, sent out a proclamation that any one who was found to have these books in his or her possession, or who, finding such books, did not instantly burn them, should be executed as a rebel by martial law.* 'Affectionate as I be to my country and countrymen,'
 said Sir Thomas Smith, 'I was ashamed of both;
 they went about their matters as men amazed,
 that wist not where to begin or end. And what marvel was it? Here was nothing but firing, heading, hanging, quartering, and burning, tax- June.
 ing and levying. A few priests in white rochets ruled all, who with setting up of six-foot roods
 and rebuilding of roodlofts, thought to make all sure.'

With the summer, fever and ague set in like The season becomes deadly.
 a pestilence. 'God did so punish the realm,'
 said Sir Thomas Smith again, 'with quartan agues, and with such other long and new sicknesses, that in the last two years of the reign of Queen Mary, so many of her subjects was made July.
 away, what with the execution of sword and fire, what by sicknesses, that the third part of the men of England were consumed.'† In the April.
 spring, the queen, misled by the same symptoms which had deceived her before, had again fancied herself enceinte. She made her will in

* Royal Proclamation, June 6, 1558: STYFFE'S Memorials,
 vol. vi.; FOXE, vol. xiii.

† Oration on the Queen's Marriage: STYFFE'S Life of Sir
Thomas Smith.

CH. 35. the avowed expectation that she was about to undergo the perils of childbearing. She wrote for her husband to come to her. She sent the fleet into the Channel, and laid relays of horses along the roads to London from Dover and from Harwich, that he might choose at which port to land.

A.D. 1558.
July.
The queen declares herself again with child, and Philip affects to congratulate her.

Philip so far humoured the fancy, which he must have known to be delusive, that he sent the Count de Feria to congratulate her. Her letter, he said, contained the best news which he had heard since the loss of Calais. But the bubble broke soon. Mary had parted from her husband on the 5th of the preceding July, and her suspense, therefore, was not long protracted. It is scarcely necessary to say in what direction her second disappointment vented itself.

She finds herself disappointed, and the persecution becomes more and more cruel.

Cranmer alone hitherto had suffered after recantation; to others, pardon had continued to be offered to the last moment. But this poor mercy was now extinguished. A man in Hampshire, named Bembridge, exclaimed at the point of execution that he would submit; a form was produced on the spot, which Bembridge signed, and the sheriff, Sir Richard Pexall, reprieved him by his own authority. But a letter of council came instantly to Pexall, that 'the Queen's Majesty could not but find it very strange' that he had saved from punishment a man condemned for heresy: the execution was to proceed out of hand; and 'if the prisoner continued in the Catholic faith, as he pretended,' 'some discreet and learned man might be present with him in his death, for the aiding of him to die God's servant.* Bembridge was accordingly burnt, and the sheriff, for the lenity which he had dared to show, was committed to the Fleet. Whole detachments of men and women were again slaughtered in London; and the queen, exasperated at the determination with which the populace cheered the sufferers with their sympathy, sent out a proclamation forbidding her subjects to approach, touch, speak to, or comfort heretics on their way to execution, under pain of death. Shortly after, a congregation of Protestants were detected at a prayer-meeting in a field near the city; thirteen were taken as prisoners before Bonner, and seven were burnt at Smithfield together on the 28th of June. The people replied to the queen's menaces by crowding about the stake with passionate demonstrations of affection, and Thomas Bentham, a friend of Lever the preacher, when the faggots were lighted, stood out in the presence of the throng, and cried:

CH. 35.
A.D. 1558.
June.

The queen threatens those who encourage heretics with death.

Seven men and women are burnt at Smithfield,

'We know that they are the people of God, and therefore we cannot choose but wish well to them and say, God strengthen them. God Almighty, for Christ's sake, strengthen them.'

The multitude shouted, in reply, 'Amen. Amen.†

Alarmed himself, this time, at the display of emotion, Bonner durst not outrage the metropolis with the deaths of the remaining six. Yet, not to let them escape him, he tried them privately

And six at Brentford at night.

* Privy Council Register, MS.

† Bentham to Lever: STYFFE'S Memorials, vol. vi.

CH. 35. in his own house at Fulham, and burnt them at Brentford at night in the darkness.*

A.D. 1558.
July.

A fleet is collected at Portsmouth.

So fared the Protestants, murdered to propitiate Providence, and, if possible, extort for the queen a return of the divine favour. The alarm of invasion diminished as summer advanced. England had again a fleet upon the seas which feared no enemy, and could even act on the offensive. In May, two hundred and forty ships, large and small, were collected at Portsmouth;† and on the day of the burning at Brentford, accident gave a small squadron among them a share in a considerable victory.

M. de Thermes
and the garrison of Calais take
and sack Dunkirk.

Battle of Gravelines,
and defeat
of the French.

Lord Clinton, who was now admiral in the place of Howard, after an ineffectual cruise in the south of the Channel, returned to Portsmouth on the 8th of July. A few vessels remained in the neighbourhood of Calais, when M. de Thermes, whom the Duke of Guise left in command there, with the garrison of Boulogne, some levies collected in Picardy, and his own troops, in all about 9000 men, ventured an inroad into the Low Countries, took Dunkirk, and plundered it. Not caring to penetrate further, he was retreating with his booty, when Count Egmont, with a few thousand Burgundians and Flemings, cut in at Gravelines between the French and their own frontiers. They had no means of passing, except at low water, between the town of Gravelines and the sea, and the English ships, which were in communication with Egmont, stood in as near as they could venture, so as to command the sands.

* 'This fact,' says Foxe, 'purchased him more hatred than any that he had done of the common people.'

† Swift to the Earl of Shrewsbury: LODGE'S Illustrations, vol. i. p. 357.

CH. 35.

A.D. 1558.
July.

De Thermes, obliged to advance when the tide would permit him, dashed at the dangerous passage; the guns of Gravelines on one side, the guns of the English vessels on the other, tore his ranks to pieces, and Egmont charging when their confusion was at its worst, the French were almost annihilated. Five thousand were killed, De Thermes himself, Senarpont of Boulogne, the Governor of Picardy, and many other men of note, were taken. If Clinton had been at hand with the strength of the fleet, and a dash had been made at Calais by land and sea, it would have been recovered more easily than it had been lost. But fortune had no such favour to bestow on Queen Mary. Clinton was still loitering at Spithead, and when news of the action came it was too late.

The plan of the naval campaign for the season was to attack Brest with the united strength of England and Flanders, and hold it as a security for the restoration of Calais at the peace. It was for the arrival of his allies that Clinton had been waiting, and it was only at the end of the month that the combined fleet, a hundred and forty sail, left Portsmouth for the coast of Brittany. They appeared duly off Brest; yet, when their object was before them, they changed their minds on the feasibility of their enterprise; and leaving their original design, they landed a force at Conquêt, which they plundered and burnt, and afterwards

The united fleets of England
and the Low Countries propose to attack
Brest.

CH. 35. destroyed some other villages in the neighbourhood.

A.D. 1558.

July.

Instead of which they burn a few villages, and return having accomplished nothing.

August 24.

The achievement was not a very splendid one.

Four or five hundred Flemings who ventured too far from the fleet were cut off; and as the Duke d'Estampes was said to be coming up with 20,000 men, Clinton re-embarked his men in haste, returned to Portsmouth, after an ineffectual and merely mischievous demonstration, and then reported the sickness in the fleet so considerable, that the operations for the season must be considered at an end.*

In the meantime, the contending princes in their own persons, Philip with the powers of the Low Countries and Spain, Henry with the whole available strength of France, sat watching each other in entrenched camps upon the Somme.

Philip and Henry begin to understand that the war may come to an end between them.

The French king, with the recollection of St. Quentin fresh upon him, would not risk a second such defeat. Philip would not hazard his late advantage by forcing an action which might lose for him all that he had gained. In the pause, the conviction came slowly over both, that there was no need for further bloodshed, and that the long, weary, profitless war might at last have an end. A mighty revolution had passed over Europe since Francis first led an army over the Alps. The world had passed into a new era; and the question of strength had to be tried, not any more between Spaniard and Frenchman, but between Protestant and Catholic. Already the disciples of Calvin threatened the Church of France; Holland was vexing the superstition of Philip, and the Protestants in Scotland were breaking from the hand of Mary of Guise: more and more the Catholic princes felt the want of a general council, that the questions of the day might be taken hold of firmly, and the Inquisition be set to work on some resolute principle of concert.

* MS. Mary, Domestic, vol. xiii.

CH. 35.

A.D. 1558.
August.

In September, the Emperor passed away in his retirement at St. Just. With him perished the traditions and passions of which he was the last representative, and a new page was turning in the history of mankind. Essential ground of quarrel between Henry and Philip there was none; the outward accidental ground—the claims on Milan and Naples, Savoy and Navarre—had been rendered easy of settlement by the conquest of Calais, and by the marriage which was consummated a few weeks after Guise's victory, between the Dauphin and the Queen of Scots.

Sept. 21.
Charles V.
dies, and
with him
the traditions of the last age.

Satisfied with the triumph of a policy which had annexed the crown of Scotland to France, and with having driven the English by main strength from their last foothold on French soil, Henry could now be content to evacuate Savoy and Piedmont, if Philip, on his side, would repeat the desertion of Crêpy, and having brought England into the war, would leave her to endure her own losses, or avenge them by her single strength. With this secret meaning on the part of France, an overture for a peace was commenced in the autumn of 1558, through the mediation of the Duchess of Lorraine. An armistice was agreed upon, and the first Conference was held at the September.

An armistice is agreed upon, and commissioners
meet to arrange the terms of a peace.

CH. 35. abbey of Cercamp, where Arundel, Wotton, and Thirlby attended as the representatives of
 A.D. 1558. September. England.

Philip is invited to make his own terms,
 at the expense of
 England;

How far Philip would consent to an arrangement so perfidious towards the country of which he was the nominal sovereign, depended, first, on the life of the queen. The titular King of England could by no fiction or pretext relieve himself of the duties which the designation imposed upon him; and if the English were deserted their resentment would explode in a revolution of which Mary would be the instant victim.*

Which he will not do while he can hope to win Elizabeth.

Mary, indeed, would soon cease to be a difficulty. She was attacked in September by the fever which was carrying off so many of her subjects. The fresh disease aggravated her constitutional disorder, and her days were drawing fast to their end. But Philip's hold on England need not perish with the death of his wife, if he could persuade her sister to take her place. His policy, therefore, was for the present to linger out the negotiations; to identify in appearance his own and the English interests, and to wait the events of the winter.

At the opening of the Conference it was immediately evident that France would not part with Calais. The English commissioners had been ordered to take no part in the discussion, unless the restitution was agreed on as a preliminary; and when they made their demand, Henry replied that 'he would hazard his crown rather than forego his conquest.'^{*} The resolution was expressed decisively; and they saw, or thought they saw, so much indifference in the Spanish representatives, that they at first intended to return to England on the spot.

* Renard found it necessary to warn Philip of this, in a despatch written in October: Granville Papers, vol. v. p. 225.

CH. 35.
A.D. 1558.
October.
The French declare that they will not part with Calais.

'To our minds,' they wrote, 'Calais is so necessary to be had again for the quieting of the world's mind in England, and it should so much offend and exasperate England, if any peace was made without restitution of it, that, for our part, no earthly private commodity nor profit could induce us thereto, nor nothing could be more grievous to us than to be ministers therein.'[†]

They were on the point of departure, when a letter from Philip required them to remain at their posts. Contrary to their expectation, the king promised to support England in insisting on the restoration, and his own commissioners were instructed equally to agree to nothing unless it was conceded.[‡] Thus for a time the negotiation remained suspended till events should clear up the course which the different parties would follow.

England will not make peace without it; and Philip promises to support the English demand.

And these events, or the one great event, was now close, and the shadows were drawing down over the life of the unfortunate Mary. Amidst discontent and misery at home, disgrace and failure abroad, the fantastic comparisons, the delirious

^{*} Arundel, Thirlby, and Wotton to the Council: French MSS., bundle 13.

[†] Ibid.

[‡] Philip to the English Ambassador, October 30: French MSS., bundle 13.

CH. 35. analogies, the child which was to be born of the
 A.D. 1558. Virgin Mary for the salvation of mankind—where October. were now these visionary and humiliating dreams?

Three men
and two women are burnt at Canterbury, being
the last to suffer.

Philip
sends the Count de Feria to England, to smooth the accession of
Elizabeth.

On the 6th of October, the Privy Council were summoned to London 'for great and urgent affairs.' At the beginning of November three men and two women suffered at Canterbury. They were the last who were put to death, and had been presented by Pole in person to be visited 'with condign punishment.*' On the 5th, parliament met, and the promised second subsidy was demanded, but the session was too brief for a resolution. The queen's life, at the time of the opening, was a question perhaps of hours, at most of days; and aware of what was impending, Philip despatched the Count de Feria to her with a desire that she should offer no objections to the succession of Elizabeth.

The count reached London on the 9th of November. He was admitted to an interview, and the queen, too brave to repine at what was now inevitable, and anxious to the last to please her husband, declared herself 'well content' that it should be as he wished; she entreated only that her debts might be paid, and that 'religion' should not be changed.

Leaving Mary's deathbed, De Feria informed the council of the king's request, and from the council hastened to the house of Lord Clinton, a few miles from London, where Elizabeth was staying. In Philip's name, he informed her that her succession was assured; his master had used his influence in her favour, and no opposition need be anticipated.

* 'Condignâ animadversione plectendos.'—WILKINS'S Concilia, vol. iv.

CH. 35.

A.D. 1558.
November.

Elizabeth listened graciously. That Philip's services to her, however, had been so considerable as de Feria told her, she was unable to allow. She admitted, and admitted thankfully, the good offices which he had shown to her when she was at Woodstock. She was perhaps ignorant that it was for the safety of Philip's life that her own had been so nearly sacrificed; that Philip's interest in her succession had commenced only when his own appeared impossible. But she knew how narrow had been her escape; she had neither forgotten her danger, nor ceased to resent her treatment. It was to the people of England, she told the count, that she owed her real gratitude. The people had saved her from destruction; the people had prevented her sister from changing the settlement of the crown. She would be the people's queen, and she would reign in the people's interest.

De Feria
has an interview
with Elizabeth;

De Feria feared, from what she said, that 'in religion she would not go right.' The ladies by whom she was surrounded were suspected; Sir William Cecil, whose conformity was as transparent then as it is now, would be her principal secretary; and the count observed, with a foreboding of evil, that 'she had an admiration for the king her father's mode of ruling;' and that of the legate she spoke with cold severity.*

Who, he fears, will not go right in religion.

* Report of the Count de Feria: TYTLER, vol. ii. p. 494. Memorial of the Duchess of Feria, MS. quoted by Lingard.

CH. 35. It is possible that Pole was made acquainted with Elizabeth's feelings towards him. To himself personally, those feelings were of little moment, for he, too, like the queen, was dying—dying to be spared a second exile, and the wretchedness of seeing with his eyes the dissolution of the phantom fabric which he had given the labours of his life to build.

A.D. 1558.
November.
Pole, as well as the queen, is dying.

Yet what he did not live to behold he could not have failed to anticipate. The spirit of Henry VIII. was rising from the grave to scatter his work to all the winds; while he, the champion of Heaven, the destroyer of heresy, was lying himself under a charge of the same crime, with the Pope for his accuser. Without straining too far the licence of imagination, we may believe that the disease which was destroying him was chiefly a broken heart. But it was painful to him to lie under the ill opinion of the person who was so soon to be on the throne of England; and possibly he wished to leave her, as a legacy, the warning entreaties of a dying man.

Three days after De Feria's visit, therefore, Pole sent the Dean of Worcester to Elizabeth with a message, the import of which is unknown; and a short letter, as the dean's credentials, saying only that the legate desired, before he should depart, to leave all persons satisfied of him, and especially her Grace.*

He writes a
last letter,
and sends a message to
Elizabeth.

* Cotton. MS. Vespasian, of November, while Mary was still alive, it has been described as to her and not to her sister. But an endorsement 'From the
F. 3. The letter is written in a shaking hand. The address is lost, and being dated the 14th

This was the 14th of November. The same day, or the day after, a lady-in-waiting carried the queen's last wishes to her successor. They were the same which she had already mentioned to De Feria—that her debts should be paid, and that the Catholic religion might be maintained, with an additional request that her servants should be properly cared for.* Then, taking leave of a world in which she had played so ill a part, she prepared, with quiet piety, for the end. On the 16th, at midnight, she received the last rites of the Church. Towards morning, as she was sinking, mass was said at her bedside. At the elevation of the Host, unable to speak or move, she fixed her eyes upon the body of her Lord; and as the last words of the benediction were uttered, her head sunk, and she was gone.

CH. 35.
A.D. 1558.
November.
Mary sends her last wishes to her sister,

Receives the sacrament, and dies.

A few hours later, at Lambeth, Pole followed her, and the reign of the Pope in England, and the reign of terror, closed together.

Nov. 17.
Pole dies, and all is over.

No English sovereign ever ascended the throne with larger popularity than Mary Tudor. The country was eager to atone to her for her mother's injuries; and the instinctive loyalty of the English towards their natural sovereign was enhanced by the abortive efforts of Northumberland to rob her of her inheritance. She had reigned little Queen's Majesty at Hatfield,' leaves no doubt to whom it was written.

* Among the apocryphal or vaguely attested anecdotes of the end of Mary, she is reported to have said, that if her body was opened, Calais would be found written on her heart. The story is not particularly characteristic, but having come somehow into existence, there is no reason why it should not continue to be believed.

CH. 35. more than five years, and she descended into the grave amidst curses deeper than the acclamations
A.D. 1558. which had welcomed her accession. In that November. brief time she had swathed her name in the horrid epithet which will cling to it for ever;
and yet from the passions which in general
tempt sovereigns into crime, she was entirely free; to the time of her accession she had lived
a blameless, and, in many respects, a noble life;
and few men or women have lived less capable
of doing knowingly a wrong thing.

Philip's conduct, which could not extinguish her passion for him, and the collapse of the inflated imaginations which had surrounded her supposed pregnancy, it can hardly be doubted, affected her sanity. Those forlorn hours when she would sit on the ground with her knees
drawn to her face; those restless days and nights
when, like a ghost, she would wander about the palace galleries, rousing herself only to write tear-blotted letters to her husband; those bursts of fury
over the libels dropped in her way; or the marchings in procession behind the Host in the London streets—these are all symptoms of hysterical derangement, and leave little room, as we think of her, for other feelings than pity. But if Mary was insane, the madness was of a kind which placed her absolutely under her spiritual directors;
and the responsibility for her cruelties, if responsibility be anything but a name, rests first with Gardiner, who commenced them, and, secondly,
and in a higher degree, with Reginald Pole. Because Pole, with the council, once interfered to prevent an imprudent massacre in Smithfield; CH. 35.

because, being legate, he left the common duties A.D. 1558.
of his diocese to subordinates; he is not to be held November.
innocent of atrocities which could neither have been commenced nor continued without his sanction; and he was notoriously the one person in the council whom the queen absolutely trusted. The revenge of the clergy for their past humiliations,
and the too natural tendency of an oppressed
party to abuse suddenly recovered power, combined to originate the Marian persecution. The rebellions and massacres, the political scandals,
the universal suffering throughout the country
during Edward's minority, had created a general
bitterness in all classes against the Reformers;
the Catholics could appeal with justice to the apparent consequences of heretical opinions; and when the Reforming preachers themselves denounced so loudly the irreligion which had attended their success, there was little wonder that the world took them at their word, and was ready to permit the use of strong suppressive measures to keep down the unruly tendencies of uncontrolled fanatics.

But neither these nor any other feelings of English growth, could have produced the scenes which have stamped this unhappy reign with a character so frightful. The parliament which re-enacted the Lollard statutes, had refused to restore the Six Articles as being too severe; yet under the Six Articles twenty-one persons only suffered in six years; while, perhaps, not twice as many more had been executed under the earlier acts in

Ся. 35. the century and a half in which they had stood on the Statute roll. The harshness of the law confined the action of it to men who were definitely dangerous; and when the bishops' powers were given back to them, there was little anticipation of the manner in which those powers would be misused.

A.D. 1558.
 November.

And that except from some special influences they would not have been thus misused, the local character of the persecution may be taken to prove. The storm was violent only in London, in Essex which was in the diocese of London, and in Canterbury. It raged long after the death of Gardiner; and Gardiner, though he made the beginning, ceased after the first few months to take further part in it. The Bishop of Winchester would have had a persecution, and a keen one; but the fervour of others left his lagging zeal far behind. For the first and last time the true Ultramontane spirit was dominant in England; the genuine conviction that, as the orthodox prophets and sovereigns of Israel slew the worshippers of Baal, so were Catholic rulers called upon, as their first duty, to extirpate heretics as the enemies of God and man.

The language of the legate to the City of London shows the devout sincerity with which he held that opinion himself. Through him, and sustained by his authority, the queen held it; and by these two the ecclesiastical government of England was conducted.

Archbishop Parker, who knew Pole and Pole's doings well, called him Carnifex et flagellum Ec-

clesiæ Anglicanæ, the hangman and the scourge of the Church of England. His character was irreproachable; in all the virtues of the Catholic Church he walked without spot or stain; and the system to which he had surrendered himself had left to him of the common selfishnesses of mankind his enormous vanity alone. But that system had extinguished also in him the human instincts, the genial emotions by which theological theories stand especially in need to be corrected. He belonged to a class of persons at all times numerous, in whom enthusiasm takes the place of understanding; who are men of an 'idea;' and unable to accept human things as they are, are passionate loyalists, passionate churchmen, passionate revolutionists, as the accidents of their age may determine. Happily for the welfare of mankind, persons so constituted rarely arrive at power: should power come to them, they use it, as Pole used it, to defeat the ends which are nearest to their hearts.

The teachers who finally converted the English nation to Protestantism were not the declaimers from the pulpit, nor the voluminous controversialists with the pen. These, indeed, could produce arguments which, to those who were already convinced, seemed as if they ought to produce conviction; but conviction did not follow till the fruits of the doctrine bore witness to the spirit from which it came. The evangelical teachers, caring only to be allowed to develop their own opinions, and persecute their opponents, had walked hand in hand with men who had

CH. 35.

A.D. 1558.
November.

CH. 35. spared neither tomb nor altar, who had stripped the lead from the church roofs, and stolen the
A.D. 1558.
November. bells from the church towers; and between them
they had so outraged such plain honest minds as remained in England, that had Mary been content with mild repression, had she left the Pope to those who loved him, and had married, instead of Philip, some English lord, the mass would have retained its place, the clergy in moderate form would have resumed their old authority, and the Reformation would have waited for a century.
In an evil hour, the queen listened to the unwise
advisers, who told her that moderation in religion was the sin of the Laodicæans; and while the fanatics who had brought scandal on the Reforming cause, either truckled, like Shaxton,
or stole abroad to wrangle over surplices and forms
of prayer, the true and the good atoned with their lives for the crimes of others, and vindicated
a noble cause by nobly dying for it.

And while among the Reformers that which was most bright and excellent shone out with preternatural lustre, so were the Catholics permitted to exhibit also the preternatural features of the creed which was expiring.

Although Pole and Mary could have laid their hands on earl and baron, knight and gentleman, whose heresy was notorious, although, in the queen's own guard, there were many who never listened to a mass,* they durst not strike where there was danger that they would be struck in return. They went out into the highways and hedges; they gathered up the lame, the halt, and the blind; they took the weaver from his loom, the carpenter from his workshop, the husbandman from his plough; they laid hands on maidens and boys 'who had never heard of any other religion than that which they were called on to abjure;'* old men tottering into the grave, and children whose lips could but just lisp the articles of their creed; and of these they made their burnt-offerings; with these they crowded their prisons, and when filth and famine killed them, they flung them out to rot. How long England would have endured the repetition of the horrid spectacles is hard to say. The persecution lasted three years, and in that time something less than 300 persons were burnt at the stake.† 'By imprisonment,' said Lord Burleigh, 'by torment, by famine, by fire, almost the number of 400 were,' in their various ways, 'lamentably destroyed.'

* UNDERHILL'S Narrative.

Yet, as I have already said, interference was impossible except by armed force. The country knew from the first that by the course of nature the period of cruelty must be a brief one; it knew that a successful rebellion is at best a calamity; and the bravest and wisest men would not injure an illustrious cause by conduct less than worthy of it, so long as endurance was possible. They had saved Elizabeth's life and Elizabeth's

CH. 35.

A.D. 1558.
November.

* BURLEIGH'S Execution of Justice.

† The number is variously computed at 270, 280, and 290.

CH. 35. rights, and Elizabeth, when her time came, would
A.D. 1558. deliver her subjects. The Catholics, therefore, November. were permitted to continue their cruelties till the cup of iniquity was full; till they had taught the educated laity of England to regard them with horror; and until the Romanist superstition had died, amidst the execrations of the people, of its own excess.

END OF VOL. VI.

Oxford Essays and Cambridge Essays.

8vo, 7s. 6d. per volume.

Oxford Essays,

1855

- Lucretius.* By W. Y. SELLAR, M.A.
On Teaching English History. By J. A. FROUDE, M.A.
Alfred De Musset. By F. T. PALGRAVE, M.A.
The Plurality of Worlds. By HENRY J. S. SMITH, M.A.
Persian Literature. By E. B. COWELL.
Crime and its Excuses. By W. THOMSON, D.D.
Oxford and its Geology. By J. PHILLIPS, F.R.S.
Hegel's Philosophy of Right. By T. C. SANDARS, M.A.
Oxford Studies. By M. PATTISON, B.D.

1856

- Comparative Mythology.* By MAX MÜLLER, M.A.
The Growth of Laws and Usages of War. By MONTAGU BERNARD, B.C.L.
The Raphael Drawings in the University Galleries. By GEORGE BUTLER, M.A.
The Land System of Ireland. By W. O'CONNOR MORRIS, B.A.
National Education. By F. TEMPLE, D.D.
Carlovingian Romance. By R. J. KING, M.A.
Mr. Congreve's 'Roman Empire of the West.' By GOLDWIN SMITH, M.A.

1857

- The Place of Homer in Education and in History.* By the Right Honourable W. E. GLADSTONE, M.A., M.P.
Sicily. By M. E. GRANT DUFF, M.A., M.P.
Schemes of Christian Comprehension. By H. B. WILSON, B.D.
Ancient Greece and Medieval Italy. By E. A. FREEMAN, M.A.
The Burnett Prizes. By BADEN POWELL, M.A., F.R.S.
The Jews of Europe in the Middle Ages. By J. H. BRIDGES, B.A.
Montaigne's Essays. By the Rev. R. W. CHURCH, M.A.
Characteristics of Thucydides. By W. Y. SELLAR, M.A.

1858

- Poetry of Pope.* By JOHN CONINGTON, M.A.
Theories of Parliamentary Reform. By Lord ROBERT GASCOIGNE CREIL, M.P., M.A.
Ancient Stoics. By Sir ALEX. GRANT, Bart.
Hymns and Hymn Writers. By CHARLES BUCHANAN PEARSON, M.A.
Norsemen in Iceland. By GEORGE WEBB DASENT, D.C.L.
Influence of the Canon Law. By JOHN GEORGE PHILLIMORE, Q.C., M.A.
Oxford University Reform. By GOLDWIN SMITH, M.A.

Cambridge Essays,

1855

- Molière.* By C. K. WATSON, M.A.
The English Language in America. By C. A. BRISTED, B.A.
Modern Geography. By F. GALTON, M.A.
Limitations to Severity in War. By CHARLES BUXTON, M.P., M.A.
On the Transmutation of Matter. By G. D. LIVING, M.A.
The Relations of Novels to Life. By FITZJAMES STEPHEN, B.A.
Prospects of the British Navy. By R. E. HUGHES, M.A.
Tennyson's Poems. By G. BRIMLEY, M.A.
General Education and Classical Studies. By W. G. CLARK, M.A.

1856

- Roman Law and Legal Education.* By H. J. S. MAINE, LL.D.
On English Ethnography. By J. W. DONALDSON, D.D.
Old Studies and New. By J. GROTE, B.D.
Taste for the Picturesque among the Greeks. By E. M. COPE, M.A.
The Apocryphal Gospels. By C. J. ELLICOTT, B.D.
The Protestant Church and Religious Liberty in France. By W. H. WADDINGTON, M.A.
The Fly-Fisher and his Library. By H. R. FRANCIS, M.A.
The Text of Shakspeare. By CHARLES BADHAM, D.D.
Coleridge. By F. J. A. HORT, M.A.

1857

- The Characteristics of English Criminal Law.* By FITZJAMES STEPHEN, LL.B.
Modern Agriculture in Britain. By ANDREW STEUART, M.A., M.P.
Telegraphic Communication with India. By FRANCIS GIBBORNE, M.A.
Porson. By H. R. LUARD, M.A.
Geology. By W. HOPKINS, M.A., F.R.S.
The Questions raised by the Mutiny. By CHARLES BUXTON, M.A., M.P.

1858

- Newspapers and their Writers.* By A. J. B. BRESFORD HOPE, M.A.
The National Defences and Organisation of the Militia of the United Kingdom. By R. A. SHAWTO ADAIR, M.A.
Sir Philip Sidney. By WM. STIGANT, M.A.
The Ancient Bashan and the Cities of Og. By CYRIL C. GRAHAM, M.R.A.S., F.R.G.S.
Commissioners and Colleges. By W. M. CAMPION, M.A.
Hieratic Papyri. By C. W. GOODWIN, M.A.